The Canadian Grocer is Read and Studied at a Time Selected by the Dealer Himself : : : :

This is one great reason why this paper is found to be a high-quality advertising medium by many manufacturers.

The advertisements are read at a time when no traveling salesman could hope to get an audience with the dealer. In most cases it is on a Sunday afternoon when a comfortable pair of slippers and the pipe of peace form pleasant portions of the program.

Readers of The Grocer have a buying power conservatively estimated at $140,000,000.

CHEESE A SPRING DIET

DR. WILEY, chief of the United States Pure Food Bureau, warns people against the theory that we eat too much. Eat all you can digest, he advises. In England, prominent physicians are giving the same advice, particularly with respect to Springtime diet—which many persons are said to limit to their own disadvantage.

Eat cheese and nuts and continue jam diet during the early Spring, they advise.

At this time of the year the body's resistance against disease is at its lowest, and cheese is one of the best body-building, germ-resisting foods.

Make a habit of eating cheese not only after lunch and after dinner, but between meals. At 11 a.m., eat a snack of bread or biscuit and cheese, and at night before going to bed consume a large portion.

Now, during the Spring, a man should, if anything, eat more than he has during the Winter, and in between meals he should eat plenty of cheese.

The many nourishing qualities of cheese cannot be exaggerated. It is a food which gives tone to the system, and certainly helps one to resist Spring illnesses.

Make your trade acquainted with the real value of cheese as a diet. It will pay you to do so and especially so

Have Your Wife Try a Bottle

Mexican Vanilla Bean Gatherer

Take home a bottle of Shirriff's True Vanilla to-night. Have your wife use it for flavoring her sauces, puddings and cakes. Get her verdict. Then you'll know how pleased other women—your customers—will be when they have tried it on your recommendation.

Shirriff's

is made from first-quality Mexican Vanilla Beans. It is the REAL extract—aged until its strength, flavor and bouquet excel all others. Very economical—a little drop goes a long way.

You are doing your customer a good service in persuading her to try Shirriff's True Vanilla in place of extracts which are vanilla in name only. There is a good profit on each bottle of Shirriff's True Vanilla. Each bottle you sell is another step gained in the "goodwill" of your customer.

that will pack it better than any other way. "H. and D." boxes deliver your products as clean, fresh and attractive as they left your warehouse or factory, and will, moreover, protect your goods from damp and damage.

May we design an "H. and D." box to suit your special need? We'll guarantee that it will save you freight packer's time and storage space.

We will be glad to do this for you; it will cost you nothing—involve no obligations.

IN CASE OF FIRE

The Insurance adjuster will make you prove your loss before he will recommend payment on your policy if your store burns.

Are you in shape to-day to prove the value of your stock of merchandise? You must do something to prove its value, your statement is not enough. What records have you?

If you are not one of the seventy thousand users of The McCaskey Gravity Account Register System, the chances are you have none.

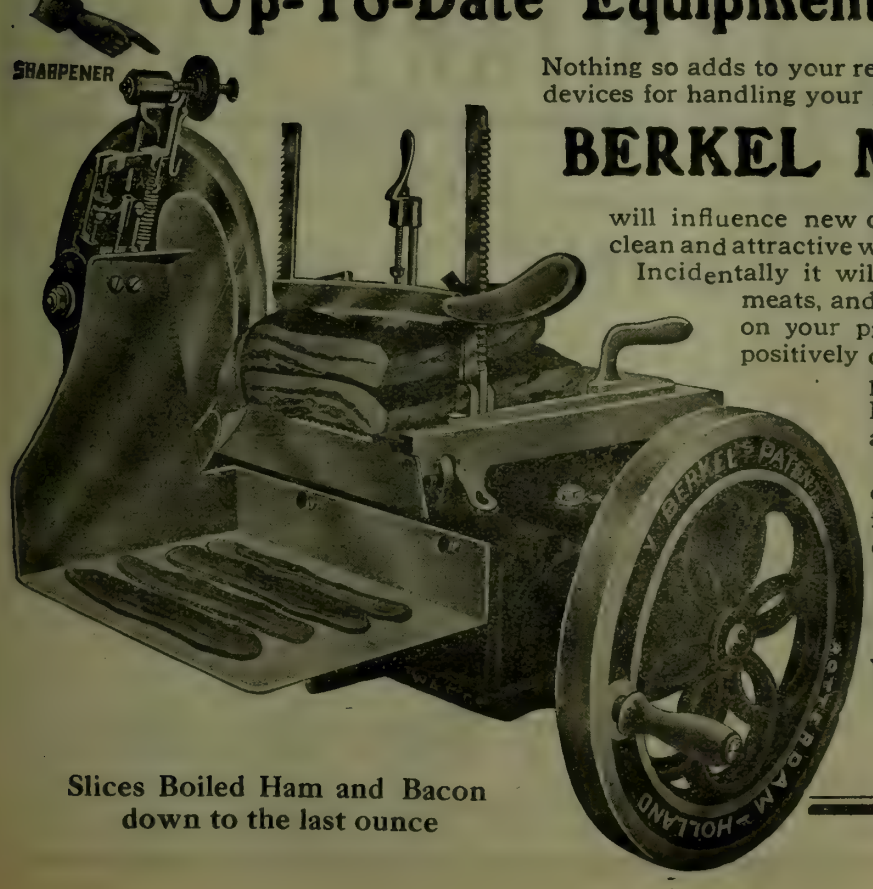
Only One Writing The McCASKEY SYSTEM First and Still the Best with one writing will handle every detail of your business from the time you buy your goods until the money for them is in the bank. It will cut out your useless bookkeeping. Every time you copy an account you add to chances for making mistakes. It will prevent errors in your account keeping. It prevents disputes with customers over their accounts because each customer has the same record of his account as has the merchant, and in the same handwriting. It prevents forgetting to charge. It is an automatic collector and brings money into the store faster than any human agency can. It is an automatic credit limit, and in case of fire puts you in position to prove your loss.

There is no need to wait to see what the "other fellow" thinks of the McCaskey System. Ask us and we'll send you hundreds of letters from users, merchants in your locality, who tell us it pays for itself several times in the course of the first year it is installed.



A letter or postal card will bring you information without obligation on your side to purchase.

Better write to-day, or tear out this advertisement, sign your name and address. We'll know you want information.

COLES
COFFEE MILLS

The pedestal mill illustrated here is the latest and newest design in coffee mills of this description, owing to the fact that it is constructed along the most advanced principle that has yet come into use.

The grinders both run at different speeds, as will be seen by the construction of the mill.

It is an acknowledged fact that: Granulating can be done more efficiently at high speed, while pulverizing can be done with less heating of the coffee at a much lower speed. These are indisputable facts.

Let the judgment of experts guide you, for they all decide unanimously in favor of this type of mill, which is Patent Applied For, and manufactured exclusively by us. Price—$150.00.

Made also for counter use. Price $135 00.

Simple, But Oh, How It Sold Dates!

Here's a simple little thing one grocer did that brought him three days of splendid date sales.

He cut our advertisement of DROMEDARY DATES from a monthly magazine—we advertise in nearly all the good ones—and pasted it on the front of his window. Over it was a brush sign, "We Sell These," and in the window a display of the cartons with one open. He says he never sold so many dates in his life.

DROMEDARY DATES are sure to sell if people see them, because they are the finest selected fruit, wrapped carefully in oiled paper and packed in cartons. They're clean, fresh, and indefinitely moist. All jobbers.

We also pack ROYAL EXCELSIOR and ANCHOR brand package dates.

Selling Goods in Housecleaning Time

Opportunities That Present Themselves at This Season Along Cleansing Lines—The Increase in Variety of Goods. Calculated to Help the Housewife in Her Annual Spring Attack on Dirt and Muck—Pushing New Lines Early That Competitor May Not Secure the Bulk of Trade.

During the next few weeks there is going to be a lot of money spent on housecleaning supplies and so it will be the wise dealer who considers all the possibilities along this line in his particular locality. No housewife, no matter how fond of work she may be, launches out into spring cleaning because she likes it, but because for her it is a necessity.

It is this "have to" spirit that the dealer must take into his calculations. The money for supplies is going to be spent somewhere and if a grocer is to be alive to opportunity he will get into the field early, and before his nearest competitor has embellished his window to draw the trade of this department.

Just as soon as the moisture born of the melting snow has gurgled away from the streets of the country, and the mild winds from out the south, have led the good wife to throw wide open the windows and doors, just so soon do the musty smells, bred of winter and closed houses, become irksome and unpleasant to every person within doors. Particularly does this apply to womenfolks, and to them, whether they like it or no, duty calls in no uncertain tones. There are carpets to be taken up and cleaned, and the floors they covered scrubbed clean of every suspicion of dirt; rugs must be beaten, windows cleaned and polished, and every nook and cranny of the home scoured and swept as clean as it is possible for human hands and human effort to make them. As a general thing the first musical call of the robin represents to the women the call to the work, and not long afterwards the irksome necessity becomes ever more apparent. Despite sighs and groans of anticipated discomfort, the good wives betake themselves to the mop and pail, and turn their attention completely to the work.

That time is with us now. Already the robin has sounded his clarion call; the warm southern breezes have induced the throwing wide open of the windows and doors, and the spirit of spring is abroad in the land. The man of the house has stored away his snow shovel in the darkest corner of the cellar and is husbanding, as well as he can, the last few scuttles of the winter's coal. The lawn mower, and the spades and rakes have again been hauled forth to do their part in the season's obligations, and the women folk feel by intuition the import of all these significant preparations.

Plenty to be Sold.

True, housecleaning is not what it used to be. Once it was an institution, a time in the domestic life, when the head of the house must needs work far into the night after the day's work, doing the heavier part of the pulling and lifting and when he afterwards literally had no place to lay his tired head. Now it has been simplified to an appreciable extent. The universal use of rugs, and carpet squares has done away with a good deal of the racking tearing. But there still remains the fundamental basis of the whole—the semi-annual cleaning. And it is with this the grocer has to concern himself, this the feeling from which he must hope to turn over some of his stock.

The field of selling operations in the lines to be used in the carrying out of this washing has been widened not a little in recent years. Time was when the scrub pail, mop, and brush, and cake of soap, were all the materials to be purchased. Now all this has been changed. From all parts of the world there have come specialties calculated to make the scrubbing easier. One after another they have crowded upon the market, until now the woman who would lay in a full complement of preparations for cleaning and burnishing would indeed find herself in possession of a goodly assortment. Soaps, powdered and solid; ammonia, liquid and flake; specially constructed pails, mops, and brushes; cleansing preparations guaranteed to save in every department of cleansing work; all these have come into existence. The good dealer is he who can successfully urge the need of all, and the place of all in the spring campaign.

Opportunities to Country Dealers.

Especially is this true of the country. City dealers, unless they be located in purely residential districts declare they hardly feel the extra demand of spring time. Their market for many of the specialties already mentioned varies but little all the year round, for the cleaning work of the most of their customers goes on continuously all the year round. It must, if sickness and disease is to be guarded against. To them the need of special attention does not appeal. But to those in the outlying sections of the cities, and practically all of the merchants in town, and village, and county, this season presents opportunities that must be grasped, and acted upon if the most of the business is to be gathered in.

In the country the housewife takes "cleaning time," much more seriously than does her city cousin. To her it is still a time-honored institution, a failure to carry out which, would virtually mean the smashing of a custom made law by tradition. There is a keen rivalry in the work, in country districts also, which is another factor tending to help the dealer in his campaign. Mrs. Smith always considers it an everlasting disgrace when Mrs. Jones, her nearest neighbor, gets her "cleaning" over with before she does. And so it is with all housewives worthy of the name.

Cultivate Competition.

How easy does it become then for the dealer to cultivate this undercurrent of domestic competition, to fan it into keenest of rivalry. And also how simple a proposition to call to the attention of each customer the special cleansing qualities of each line he can muster on his shelves and urge her to purchase the same if she would beat her most energetic neighbor in the spring race. These things are deeply-rooted in the minds of most women in the country and it is for country dealers to take the fullest advantage of the opportunities they present to him.

So it is the dealer must take these things to himself and feel that he is in a race with his nearest competitor for this spring business. Often the merchant who first gets the special lines into the window and onto his counters secures a considerable advantage over the next dealer, because women will generally remember goods they have seen in the first window without thinking that their regular grocer handles precisely the same lines. It is the getting of the stuff out where it can be seen that seems to count just as the initial advertising of any line goes a long way towards turning the volume of trade in that particular line of goods to the man who had the courage or foresight to do it in the first instance.

Who Started it First?

Nobody exactly knows who started house-cleaning. Probably our mother Eve was not in the Garden of Eden long enough to enjoy the luxury of tearing things to pieces. But, ever since our ancestors took to living in houses, this thing has been. Historians would have conferred a favor upon humanity had they but given a beginning for the custom and the reason why the beginning was. There are those who declare vigorously to-day that the spring housecleaning started in England only after the "Black Death" had devastated that country. Whatever the cause, the devotees to-day seem to feel that dire calamities will surely fall upon the house that is not thoroughly cleaned in the spring. It's a good thing for the grocer that this is so. Let him make the most of it while he has yet time.

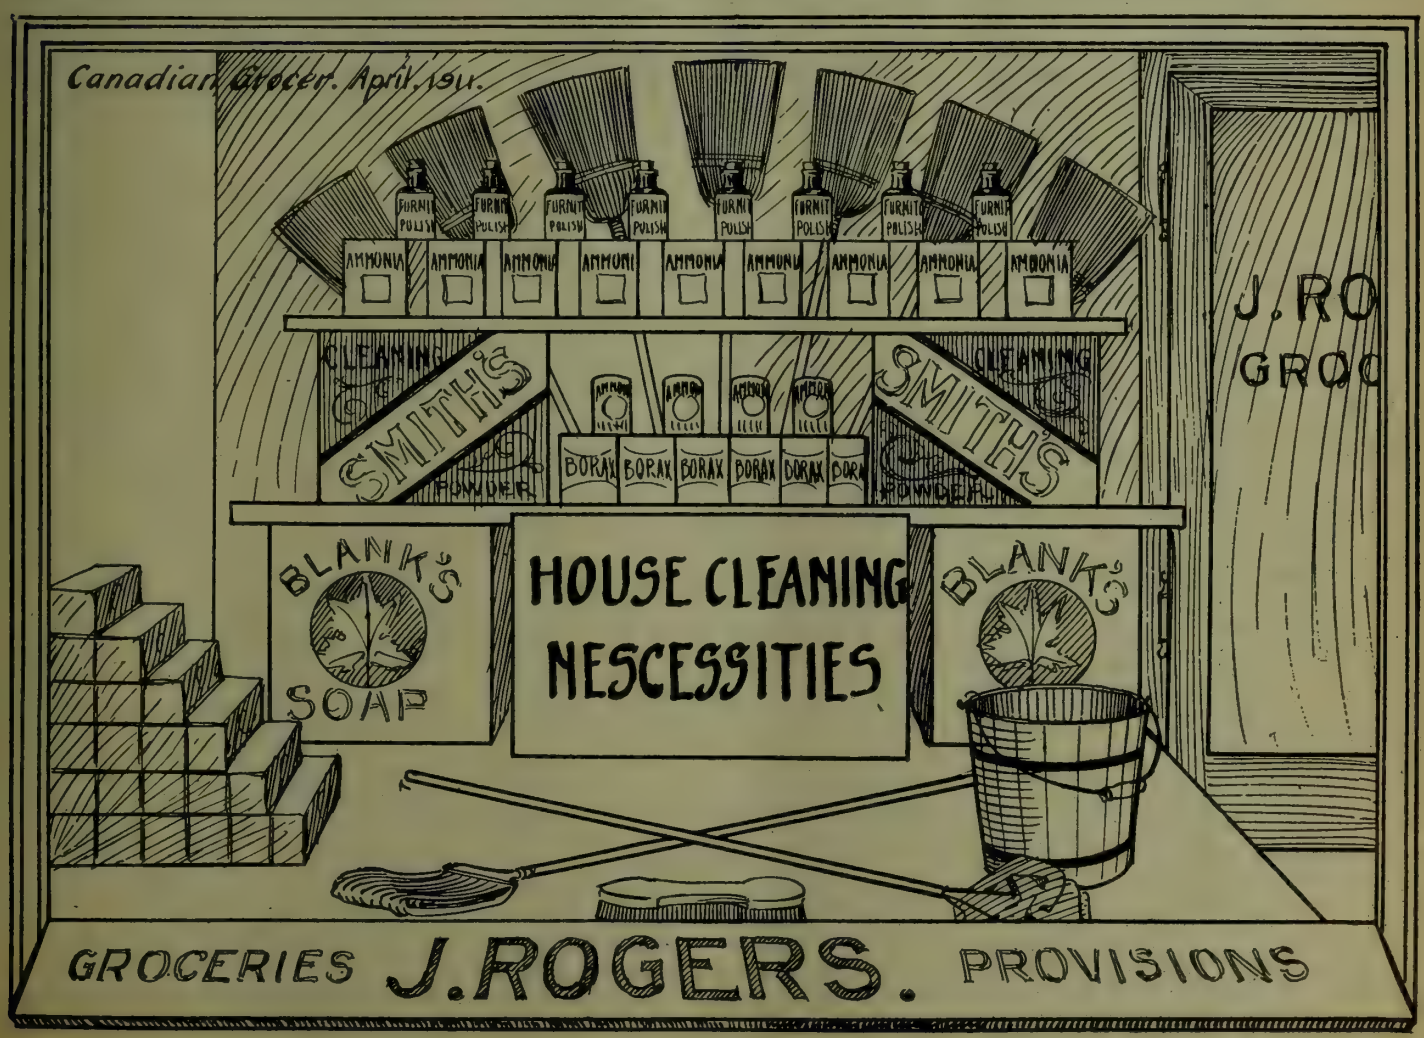
Selling the Different Cleaning Goods

How Some Dealers Have Been Convinced of Possibilities in Spreading Sale of Cleansing Products — Experience of One Merchant Who Pressed Every Customer to Buy—One Retailer's Introduction to Modern Window Cleaning—Some Window Displays.

Housecleaning comes but once a year and uncovers a multitude of spots where the germs of disease are brooding. It also uncovers a multitude of lines of goods generally neglected by most dealers during the balance of the year.

There are many labor saving articles on the market which are helpful to customers in cleaning and there is no doubt that the demand could be increased if dealers would give more attention to pushing them. Most of these, when once introduced to customers will bring repeat orders for the housewife in most cases will continue the use of any line that saves labor or helps in the housecleaning crusade. Dealers are inclined to leave these articles to effect their own demand. This should not be. There are good talking points to these labor savers, and they should be given to the customer.

One Dealer's Experience.



That merchants do not realize the opportunities in this direction is shown by one dealer's experience. He said, "An agent for a cleansing powder called and wanted to sell me a certain quantity of his line. I told him that I did not sell enough to buy that quantity. He was surprised and said that my sale of cleanser with the business I had should be much larger. He seemed confident that I could sell more if I tried and impressed this fact so firmly on me that I decided to make a trial. I put a display of his line on the counter and introduced it to each customer. I was surprised at the number of people who were not acquainted with its use or at least all of its uses and by my attempts to explain how it saved labor, I received increased sales in this line."

The Window Cleaner.

Another grocer tells of his experience in extending the sale of a window washing line. "Last spring when waiting on many customers, talk turned to housecleaning and its attendant troubles. Several remarked that they did not mind it so much, except for washing the windows, which was very cold on the hands if the weather was a bit chilly. I found this to be a common complaint, so one day when a customer remarked about housecleaning I said the window washing was very cold on the hands. "Oh! no I don't find it cold. I use ——— ———," mentioning a window washing line. It was from this remark I secured the idea for an increase in trade in window washing powder. I cleaned the glass in my window and put in a window display of this article. In the centre was a house window perfectly cleaned. On one side was a tub of water representing the old way, and on the other the cleaner representing the new way. At the top was a card: "Don't freeze your hands washing the windows. Use ——— ———." I also had other house cleaning articles in the window, and found that the display appealed to many of my customers in a manner to make sales."

Some Displays.

Some very catchy displays of articles used in house cleaning can be made that will give excellent returns. Those who can afford to use the space, should have a window display before people begin on their regular spring work. If a window cannot be given up to this, the counter and ledges should be used to bring the different lines to the attention of customers. It is best to have a combined display of all the different lines in one place in the store if possible, as this brings better results than smaller and scattered showings. The window shown below may serve to supply an idea that may be altered to suit different localities. It explains itself.

It should be an easy matter to sell new lines that are calculated to make house cleaning drudgery less hard. There is always a keen rivalry obtaining in small centres, and a careful introducing of some good powder or liquid or mop, should be fruitful in sales. All women, no matter what hard workers they be, are always glad to be sold something to give them a few more minutes of ease during a week. They all are seeking this, and if you prove to them that the quality of the cleansing will suffer in no wise through the quicker process of modern cleansing powders, then half of the fight has already been won. But be careful to have the customer feel that your interest in the matter is purely impersonal or else she may leave in annoyance and seek other stores for all her goods in the future.

Quality Held Customers Miles Away

Interesting Experience of Montreal Grocer Whose Butter and Eggs Were so Good That Customers Gone From His Vicinity Would Continue to Demand Them—Quality the Keynote in Arranging with Farmers—Other Instances.

Montreal, April 20.—When a customer moves from the vicinity of a particular grocer the latter naturally endeavors to retain that trade. When he learns of the proposed removal he doubtless suggests that the pleasant relationship of the past continue uninterrupted by the mere change of abode. But there are grocers in the other part of the town probably with goods of equal quality, and the customer's tendency is to trade near home. The housewife needs something in a hurry, and one of the nearby grocers is called upon and the wedge once entered completes the cleavage from the former grocer.

A Montreal retailer believes that he has found one way to prevent the old regard from passing to another dealer His actual experience leads him to believe that his idea is worth remembering. For many years he has specialized in butter, eggs and bacon, particularly the former two commodities. Week after week he has watched the quality of his butter and tried to do likewise with eggs. He has made arrangements with farmers to pay them a good price to receive a good price in return. His customers practically depended upon him for their weekly supplies of butter and eggs.

Customers Came Back.

Then when one moved away they simply would not think of using any other kind of butter than that which they were accustomed to, and would rather continue with this grocer than try to find another just as suitable. The grocer was only too pleased to hold them, in this way. Speaking of the results from this work he said recently; "There is one family who as regularly as Saturday comes receive their twelve pounds of butter. I send them eggs too, and coffee, but I have found that most of the other groceries are obtained from some store near their new home." That is one case and others of a similar nature could be cited to prove this grocer's point.

He Demanded Quality.

When he opened his store, he determined upon the policy of carrying good eggs, butter, bacon, coffee and tea. These were goods that were sold every day to almost every home. Therefore, they would be in good demand. Hence it was essential that they should be of such a quality that customers would be pleased and satisfied. It was not an easy matter in the beginning. The making of arrangements with farmers whose goods proved the "fittest;" the laying down of a strict law with them that everything must be fresh and good; this was one of the duties that at first required a great deal of attention. When the source of supply was, however, well established the rest was plain sailing.

The Standard the Reason.

The point brought out here is worth while bearing in mind. The writer knows a number of other Canadian grocers who have experienced the same results. They will tell you that some of their customers are several miles away from their store. They used to live in the neighborhood but they moved away. How were they retained as customers. Generally by the means just related. Among the number recalled is one in Toronto. He has not only held customers but has secured new ones in outlying districts. The Montreal grocer referred to has many customers at a distance but of course does not make daily trips to them. That he still numbers them among his following is due, so he claims, to the manner in which he had educated them to the use of the butter, eggs, etc., with which he supplied them. The writer personally knows quite a number of grocers of whom the same can be said and the success they have attained is open to any other member of the trade who will make the same hard and fast rules as to quality and never deviate in the least.

One delivery of bad butter is remembered for months and customers who have been "pampered" frequently refuse to keep it. The grocer must carefully watch the stocks he receives. The point might be dealt with further to prove that this principle is not only valuable for holding present customers but others also when the parting of the ways seems imminent.

HOW B.C. ASSOCIATION GETS MEMBERS TO MEETINGS

Unique Method Hit Upon By Secretary—Ten Dollars Given Away—Price Cutting Before The Meeting — Cafe Proprietors Want to Buy at Wholesale Prices.

Vancouver, B.C., April 20.—R. D. Dinning, secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, has hit upon a unique plan to get many members out and get them out early. More than one association has found that the members are slow to come to the meetings and if they did come it was generally late before the business was started. Mr. Dinning proposed that the association put up $10 each meeting night, this to be drawn for at 8.30 sharp. It had a wonderful effect and at the meeting on Tuesday evening, over thirty were drawing blanks for the money. There was nothing like it before. Some of the members, when the proposal was made, thought $10 was quite an item, but they all agree now that it is worth the money to see so many turn out.

At this meeting several matters were discussed, among them being price cutting. This "luxury" is being indulged in by some of the members, who fall for the remark of the customer "that the article in question can be had cheaper elsewhere." Even at the regular prices, with competition as keen as it is, little profit is made, yet some grocers sell at cost to hold a customer who gives no definite place where the cheaper price prevails. The departmental stores have prices for the bargain hunters, but one must go to the stores and pay cash, no deliveries being made even c.o.d.

The proprietors of the cafes in the city are organizing into an association, and one of their objects is to establish a sort of a co-operative association. They have approached the wholesalers in an endeavor to get supplies at wholesale rates, but were turned down. It is hinted that they may go to Seattle and buy there. The fact of the matter is the cafes now get goods at almost wholesale rates from the retailers. This is not so much to hold their trade as to enable the dealers to buy in large lots, getting the benefit of the price in such cases. With large orders from restaurants they can afford to buy larger than if they have to depend on the regular turnover of business. It will be pointed out to the association that they will save little by going to Seattle, besides taking business away from the city where they are located.

Merchants Plan to Educate Consumer

R. M. A. in Montreal Decide to Get Out Pamphlets to be Sold to the Trade for Distribution re Purchasing From Mail Order Houses—Co-operative Bills Before the Footlights Again—Several Resolutions Passed.

Montreal, April 20.—The annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada was held in Montreal, on Monday, April 17th. Apart from the election of officers there was much important business carried through, the co-operative bills now before parliament receiving by no means the least attention.

A comprehensive list of resolutions were passed dealing with the most prominent subjects the Canadian retail trade has to meet. Some of these brought out considerable discussion but the bulk of the action was directed at the co-operative idea.

The officers for the coming year were elected and constitute the Dominion Board: P. J. Cote, president; Mayor A. M. Patterson, Brockville, 1st vice-president; Capt. W. V Boivin, Montreal, 2nd vice-president; J. A. Beaudry, Montreal, treasurer; E. M. Trowern, Toronto, secretary; J. G. Watson, Montreal, auditor.

Regarding the co-operative bills the general objection raised was that they would permit irresponsible persons to collect funds from the working classes under promise that they would benefit by being members of a co-operative association, which would in return sell them merchandise at reduced rates, but it was alleged that the history of these organizations in England where they were looked upon as having Socialistic tendencies, was that failure often came to their doors and subscribers did not find out until too late that they had been duped.

During the discussion it was remarked that the two bills were supplementary to each other, one authorizing the collection of funds and the other the formation of the co-operative societies, but that either of them if adopted would permit the objectionable legislation to be adopted.

Reasons for Objections.

Opposition to the first bill which is sponsored by F. D. Monk, M.P., was to the effect that it provided for no efficient government inspection that the money invested might be invested in any manner the committee of management saw fit, and that there would be no limit to the number of such societies which might be formed. Also that any seven persons living in the Dominion might fill out a blank form and upon forwarding it to Ottawa may secure the right of incorporating themselves without any cost and thus begin a loan and savings company, limited. These shares are to be one dollar each and a million or more shares might be secured by each society if they so desired.

It was further explained that no money guarantee or deposit was to be placed with the government and that the whole scheme opened paths to speculative visions over the old established savings bank and loan companies which were conducted by experienced men.

The other bill was that introduced by W. M. Martin, M.P., Regina. At the convention it was shown that the first bill was for the purpose of getting money from the people and the second gave them authority to secure and invest money into operative societies, so as to manufacture and do a wholesale and retail business. Practically the same plan as in the first bill was provided for organization. The seven proprietors, it was said, could begin business the same way as in the first instance, could borrow money and with this money, together with what was secured from the sale of shares they would be able to manufacture or buy or sell at retail, grain, land, timber, paper, coal, cement, produce, paper, dry goods, hardware, jewelry, boots and shoes, etc. No restrictions were mentioned in the bill, one of the speakers stated, as to how the business should be conducted or how their business shall be inspected by the government.

The discussion was concluded by a resolution condemning both bills.

Some of the Resolutions.

Among the resolutions passed were the following:

"That this convention is strongly opposed to the System of Bribes or gifts for the purchase of goods or any other scheme or device which may be considered as an inducement for the public to buy goods, and that copy of this resolution be sent to all manufacturers and merchants who have adopted this system."

"That this convention wishes to re-express the opinion that it is in favor of the maintenance of prices on any article bearing a trade mark, and recommends that all retail merchants make a special effort to help the manufactures who adopt this system."

"That this convention is strongly opposed to any system of publicity the nature of which it is to deceive the public, either on the quantity, the quality, or the value of the goods, or their make, or any system whose object it is to have the public expect an advantage which is not existing."

To Get Out Pamphlet.

"That this convention wishes to express the opinion that the retail trade in general has much to suffer from dishonest competition from some stores doing business by mail, and we think the best means to reduce that competition would be to undertake a campaign of education amongst the public, and that in order to attain the object more economically and more surely, the Dominion officers have decided to get out a pamphlet mentioning the facts and arguments on the subject, and which can be bought by the merchants in the different cities and towns and distributed by them."

"That this convention again places itself on record and believes shat it is uniust that the retail merchants should pay for the inspection of weights and measures, as such inspection is made in order to protect the public. The Dominion Board have decided to take the necessary steps to have the law amended, so that the inspection of weights and measures be made at the expense of the public treasury."

"That this convention desires to express the opinion that provincial committees representing the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, Inc., should work in conjunction with similar committees appointed by the Wholesale Merchants' Association, in the different lines of trade with a view to improve the commercial relations between the retailers and the wholesalers, and also with a view to determine the field of operations of each of these classes."

"That this convention desires to express the opinion that it would be more profitable to the trade and public in general if a committee of the Retail Merchants Association of Canada, Inc., was appointed in order to work with a similar committee appointed by the manufacturers and wholesalers of goods bearing a trade mark, with a view to take the necessary measures to have their prices maintained."

"That this convention desires to express the opinion that the Dominion Government employes should be forced to pay their creditors in the same way as the public in general, and that their salary be seizable according to the common law."

"That this convention desires to express our appreciation of the action of the minister of agriculture in making provision in the schedules to be used in taking the census of 1911 for a census of retail merchants and for the value of their real estate as this will assist our association in knowing how many retail merchants there are in Canada, and enable us to know the value of the real estate they occupy."

"That we desire to again express our appreciation of the amendment of the criminal law relating to combines, and which was recently placed upon the statute books by the Hon. L. Mackenzie King."

"That this convention in considering the proposals that are being made by some public bodies to secure a uniform half holiday and a uniform civic holiday throughout the various municipalities of Ontario, recommend that each Provincial Board of the Association secure the dates on which half holidays and civic holidays are now held and forward them to the secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association so that they can give them to their travelers."

"That this board places itself upon record as being opposed to the giving of special privileges by manufacturers to any retail merchant who professes to do a jobbing trade, and does not do so, but who uses the privileges to undersell his competitar."

Members are Strong on Early Closing

One States at Association Meeting That Grocers Who Work Their Clerks Late are Not Respectable—Overcoming Department Store Aggressiveness—Six-for-a-Quarter System Once More Condemned.

Toronto, Apr. 20.—The members of the Toronto Grocers' Association showed themselves in favor of shorter hours and more holidays at their monthly meeting in the Temple Building on Monday night.

A. White spoke strongly in favor of both early closing and half holidays on Wednesday afternoons during the summer months, and made a plea to the association to make some effort to make it more general. Other members of the association also took the same stand, believing that employes in the grocery store should have shorter working hours. It was shown that in some neighborhoods while the majority were in favor of such a step, it was held back by one or two dealers who refused to fall in line. However, many of the dealers did not let that stop them, but closed anyway.

Mr. White suggested that this should be brought before the public through the newspapers or in some other manner, and believed that it would do a great deal of good. It was stated that in one district the dealers that did close sent out a pamphlet to their customers in which they explained they thought the clerks should have shorter hours, and asked the public to co-operate with them in the movement.

Six-for-a-Quarter Again.

The soap question came in for considerable discussion again, the cutting in price causing trouble in some districts, while in others dealers seem to be able to maintain the price at 5 cents straight. D. W. Clark and D. McLean stated that their customers never mentioned the cheaper prices.

Some stores were selling it as low as 6 for 25 cents, and one member declared that at present soap in the city was selling at three different prices. The opinion was expressed by several that there was the possibility of a change in price to the dealer, from hints that were passing around.

Price cutting in general came in for discussion, C. F. Thorne remarking that some dealers evidently tried to see how much lower than the other dealers they could sell, instead of attempting to get a fair profit.

Neglecting the Dealer.

Several of the dealers stated that they had considerable trouble in getting water in bottles and soft drinks with which to supply their customers' demand, and it was decided to suggest to the distributing company that they give more attention to supplying the retailer with their goods.

The department store question came up for ventilation, being introduced by Neil Carmichael.

"There is a problem," he said, "which the retail merchant will be called upon to contend against very soon, and that is the department store and mail order question. The growth of the departmental stores, especially within the past few years, has been very great, and some way must be found to combat them. The position of the retail trade could be strengthened by putting themselves before the people through good advertising—advertising that would divert the attention of the public from these stores to our own."

Other members of the association thought it would be a good thing, and something that would eventually have to be done, but it was pointed out that while all dealers would be benefited by this, it might be impossible to get them all to do their share financially in the work.

The association picnic last year was such a great success that the members this year are enthusiastic over the 1911 annual. Although not definitely decided, it is probable that the excursion will again be run to Cobourg, and on June 14. The printing committee appointed was B. Snow, D. McLean and R. Davies, while the Games Committee is composed of D. Bell, J. M. Cork, R. Mathews, D. W. Clark and F. Johnston.

Means and methods of extending the association so as to make it a more powerful organization were discussed. The names of five other grocers were proposed for membership.

Remarked on the Side.

"One man went out of business the other day in Toronto selling 6 for a quarter," said one member. "Let them all go," came from another.

"I was talking to a grocer from Winnipeg the other day, and from what he told me, groceries are being cut even worse there than here."

"In the grocery business if each individual merchant would stand pat on getting a fair price, we would not hear so much from customers of cheaper prices of certain goods at other stores."

"I know a grocer on ——— Street who sells any biscuit he has, regardless of cost, at 16 cents a pound."

"A man who will keep his store open from 7 in the morning to 10 and 11 at night all the year round is not respectable; he is dishonest with his clerks."

T. A. LYTLE DEAD.

Vinegar, Pickle, etc., Manufacturer Passes Away Rather Suddenly.

Toronto, Apr. 20.—The report of the death of Thomas Alexander Lytle, founder of T. A. Lytle & Co., was received last week with much regret by all those who knew him. As a business man he has had a long career. He came from the north of Ireland to Canada in 1871 and entered the employ of William Wilson, vinegar manufacturer.

T. A. LYTLE,

Founder of the T. A. Lytle Company, Who Passed Away Suddenly Last Week.

About 28 years ago he founded the firm of T. A. Lytle & Co. He was president of Wilson, Lytle, Badgerow & Co., vinegar manufacturers, and president of the Westminster Publishing Co.

Mr. Lytle has also given much of his time to Toronto municipal affairs, having been a member of the Collegiate Institute School Board in 1903, and of the City Council in 1907 and 1908. His death, too, was quite sudden, as on the same day he had been to his place of business as usual.

Twetin & Stayner, general merchants, Outlook, Sask., dissolved, Twetin continuing.

The storehouse of Chas. Rishor, wholesale grocer, Peterboro, was damaged considerably by fire.

Albert Hebert, of Hudon, Hebert, Montreal, is in Europe, where he will spend four or five months.

A bill that the R.M.A. of Canada have been promoting for some time has just passed the House of Commons and is now law. It provides that throughout Canada the weight of a bag of potatoes is fixed at 80 lbs.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

THE PRICE OF TOMATOES.

Summing up the best information available at the moment it seems probable that in the natural order of things there will be a sharp advance in the prices of tomatoes soon. Quotations have risen rapidly in Florida, according to reports and a still higher market is looked for there.

The eastern provinces of Canada will be dependent upon the Florida product for some time to come, and accordingly, Florida prices will prevail upon these markets. Relief may be looked for, only in the ripening of the domestic product, which cannot take place for some little time, or in the sending in of supplies from other States of the Republic.

At first it was thought the tomato yield in Florida would be heavy. Unfavorable weather conditions, however, retarded its growth, and the gardeners declare that had transportation facilities ruined what little chance was left. Anyway, whether this be true or not, the reports coming from the Southern States all point to a higher market, and it might be well for grocers to consider the same.

COLLECT WINTER DEBTS.

Now that spring has become an established fact throughout the country, and housewives are turning with grim energy to the annual spring house cleaning, it might be well for the grocer to consider his business well and see if there are not some trade cobwebs he should clear out before starting out on new business.

The winter is the season when, generally speaking, the failings of customers are presented to the view of the dealer. Folks get out of work, expenses are heavier, and altogether it is harder for the average poor family to make "both ends meet." Then out of the goodness of his heart the grocer extends credit to many. Not always is he repaid in like spirit, and more often is he cursed in secret.

Now is the time when these accounts should be swept from off the books. Business is taking on new life. Labor is in much greater demand, and more money is in circulation. The grocer should get some of it, where debts have been owing him all through the winter. He should get in communication with these customers, and have them know the time has come when they must pay up. If he doesn't do so they will be contracting new liabilities and will so feel the pressure of these that the old, debt owing the grocer is quite forgotten, or else considered out of the question.

HOUSECLEANING TIME.

This ought to be a good time for the dealer to take stock of all that he has, to compare the returns of the transactions of the winter season with those of the last, and calculate on a good, progressive campaign for the spring. Everybody else will be house-cleaning soon, and there is no reason why he should not.

If there is anything wrong with the business, now is the time to remedy it, or at least to attempt to do so. A policy that just naturally drifts on until relief is effected, is not one that can be commended to-day. This is an age of facts, and business was never so keen and hard as it is at this very moment.

Every department of every store should be investigated, and its sales compared with those of periods past, so that some average of progress may be struck. For that matter the process should be carried down into the investigation of individual lines, that the value of each may be ascertained.

SELLING POWER OF THE DEALER.

The report has been circulating in certain eastern sections of the United States that the price of coffee at the docks is multiplied three or four times before it reaches the consumer.

"The Saturday Evening Post," in commenting upon this editorially, quotes a "prominent retailer" as admitting this to be so and adding that the grocer simply had to secure a good profit on some lines if he wanted to remain in business, because the margin on such lines as sugar and soap had been cut so that securing a living from the handling of them was impossible to the average dealer.

Then the periodical wanted to know where the grocer would look to for profit did the coffee people fixed a low price at which their goods must go to the consumer.

What WOULD happen? The grocer is going to make a living or else he will not stay in business. He is going to make that living selling groceries. And to carry the proposition forward, the groceries he is going to sell are those returning to him the most profit, those upon which he can rely and about which he knows the most.

A good dealer can carry a stock of his own selection, and sell it. That is he can deliberately choose quality lines of goods that are sure to return a good profit, and sell them while other lines of small-profit character or about which he knows very little, are hidden away under the counter, or the back of his shelves.

Practically every good grocer in the country is following this line of action to-day, because he must. Many others absolutely refuse to handle certain lines of consumer-advertised, standard, goods, simply because the margin of profit allowed is not worth the trouble of handling them. A grocer drops one line of goods when the profit drops and takes up and PUSHES another, on which the margin is greater. But, of course, he first assures himself of the quality of the article he is going to sell. That is what IS happening.

HOW CIRCULATION GROWS.

Probably there is no better way to calculate upon the growth of trade in any country than by delving into the circulation returns of its trade papers. When business is good, and the great trade machine runs smoothly and surely, the periodical press that goes to the men who deal with the people is the first to experience the good. Just now The Canadian Grocer desires to state that most excellent is the condition of Canadian trade, and we give the following figures to enable our readers to judge whether we have reason to so say or no.

During the first three months of this year exactly 404 new dealers subscribed to The Canadian Grocer. This is an increase of 257, or, roughly speaking, 275 per cent. over last year—a pretty good showing that, and pointing to the conclusion that there is energy behind the men who are entering the business field of this country.

The names don't come from any particular part of the country. They come from points as widely separated as Prince Edward Island in the east, and Vancouver and Prince Rupert in the west. Even Dawson, in far-off golden Yukon, is represented, and England has also sent along several names to swell the list.

In one week eleven new subscribers were added in Prince Rupert, in northern British Columbia. From still further north—Stewart, on the Portland canal, and a mining centre—there came three. Havana, Cuba, and Leeds and Birmingham, in England, each contributed. We add these to show how widely this paper is read, and how much the information it contains is relied upon.

Canada is surely prospering, as we have said, and The Canadian Grocer is proud to note its place in the ever-moving procession.

Series of Demonstrations to Answer Correspondent Who Contended That Profit Should be Figured on Capital Employed—The Sale of Baldwin Locomotive Compared with Transaction in Cake of Yeast—The Sale of the Horse—Clear Transaction in Tomatoes—Marks Difference Between Success and Failure.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Mr. Jamieson says that profit is defined as the gain arising from the employment of capital. He gets his authority from a dictionary. That dictionary would undoubtedly refer to engineers' "jumpers" as "overalls" but, as has been well said, no man who wears them calls them anything but "overalls," so probably the dictionaries will be reformed, in time:

As I stated last week, usance and custom take precedence over text books and dictionaries. This is not merely because "whatever is is right," but because the usance or custom of to-day is likely to be an improvement on, because an evolution from, that of yesterday.

Gain on Employment of Capital.

However, it makes little difference, so long as we understand each other; but, as we have a complex problem, maybe we had better adopt the definition. Let us consider profit as the ultimate gain due to the employment of capital, and hold "margin" as the difference between cost and selling price in the daily transactions; but let it be carefully noted that the question of cost accounting does not enter into this discussion. Cost accounting is fundamently important, but is "another story" altogether.

Now, the daily margin and the correct figuring thereof is the PROCESS, the means toward the end that the profit may be on the right side at the end of the year.

The net profit at inventory time must show itself after every proper deduction from gross profit has been made. There must be a deduction of all general and special expenses; interest; proprietor's salary; and reasonable depreciation on all equipment. What is left is all, under our definition, that can be called profit.

It is in order that we may not fall into errors which will cost us the ultimate profit that, in the PROCESS, we follow the plan of computing our daily margin on the SELLING PRICE and not on the COST.

Selling Baldwin Locomotives.

Mr. Jamieson's citation of the sale of a house recalls the plan under which I am told Baldwin locomotives are built and sold. A separate account is opened with each locomotive built. Every item entering into the building of the machine is charged against that machine. A pair of side bars comes from the shop with such and such charges against it, for material, time, etc., and that item goes onto the book. A steambox is handled the same way. So with eccentrics, and valves, and cylinders. When the engine is finished, all costs are added and 10 per cent. of the cost is added as profit. Then it is billed. Thus it frequently happens that sundry locomotives built to fill one order vary considerably in cost, and always they vary somewhat. But that is the way the business is handled.

Not for the Grocer.

That must be the right way for Baldwin, because it has proved satisfactory and profitable. But surely nobody would think of intimating that such a method could be applied to a grocery store. Try to think of such a thing in connection with the sale of a cake of yeast. Here is an article the first cost of which is, say, 1¼c. A child goes to the butter counter while you happen to be weighing butter, lays down the money and you hand her the yeast, which she puts into her purse unwrapped. On the Baldwin plan, she should pay you about 1⅝c. Another customer telephones for a cake of yeast—maybe without another item, and has it charged on her bill. It may go in a wagon together with a lot of goods and orders going the same way, or it may go almost alone. The cost of that yeast to her should vary anywhere from 15c to $1.25, depending on length of haul, weather, time, and a hundred other modifying circumstances and conditions. Obviously, the Baldwin method will not work in your store and mine; yet it is a good plan for Baldwin.

End-of-Week Transaction.

But to get back to the house. I assume that the entire problem is stated; that the house was not held for any length of time, or that, being held, it "earned its keep," and that there was no undue expense connected with its sale. If this is the correct interpretation, then this house transaction falls into the end-of-the-year class of transaction, because it is finished and cleaned up. Thus it is proper to state the profit as earned on the capital employed.

The Sale of the Horse.

Now we come to the sale of the horse. Mr. Jamieson says of the seller that "he has at no time, even theoretically, been entitled to the $75;" but surely Mr. Jamieson has not thought carefully. If the seller is a man of standing, there would be nothing unusual for the broker to tell the buyer to pay the seller and get the horse; then afterwards the broker would collect his commission, brokerage or percentage, 33 1-3 per cent., from the seller. That is precisely what happens in many such deals, since the broker often brings buyer and seller together, afterwards collecting his brokerage from the seller. Thus, so far as the buyer is concerned, the seller, not only "theoretically," but ACTUALLY, gets all the money.

Answers Own Argument.

But Mr. Jamieson, inconsistently enough from his standpoint, has furnished the answer to his own argument. He says the broker "puts through a transaction valued at $75.00" — in other words, the SALE of the horse—"on which investment, made by the new owner, he charges a commission of 33 1-3 per cent." Exactly. He gets his commission, brokerage, or gross margin, on the SELLING PRICE. Correct—absolutely. For, in handling, say, a can of tomatoes, the grocer is a broker, who collects the entire selling price from the buyer; and, if you will, charges his margin, brokerage, or commission, on the investment made by the new owner—the SELLING PRICE. For why should it be right for the broker to figure on the selling price and incorrect for the grocer-broker to do the same thing? If there is no exception taken to the broker when he figures his margin on the sale at $75, shall any fault be found with the grocer, when he figures that, in selling the can of tomatoes, he computes his gross margin, say, on 10 cents? Why should the grocer figure on the 7 cents which the can cost him, let us say, in preference to the 10 cents at which the can is sold? I say he should mainly NOT figure on the 7 cents, because to do so is to invite financial disaster; and that seems sufficient reason to me.

A Sum in Arithmetic.

In the old arithmetic we found examples like the following: How much do I pay for 9¾ pounds of ham at 16 cents a pound? And the old way was to laboriously multiply this 16 by 9¾. But the up-to-date grocer rapidly figures in his mind: "Ten pounds $1.60; less 4 cents, $1.56," and he gets it in a second, by subtraction, instead of in a minute of laborious figuring, by multiplication. Now, if subtraction is readier with the accurate solution, why not use it instead of following the "rules"? The world moves.

When the country was new, merchants scattered and margins wide, it did not matter much which way a man did figure; but naw it makes the difference between success and failure; and just as the old, dirty store will no longer prove profitable, so will the old way of figuring not win in these days of close, keen, margin-destroying competition, not to mention the devious ways of those who pack goods in packages to deceive the grocer.

Year's Profit and Daily Margin.

The investment in stock to which Mr. Jamieson refers is purely an employment of capital, and it would be well here to indicate, for the sake of clearing up things, just how I differentiate between the end-of-the-year profit and the daily margins. After the inventory is taken and all deductions made, as above indicated, the net profit is divided by the capital-investment to ascertain the net gain made. Say I have $10,000 invested in my business and, after all stated deductions, I find my net profit is $2,400. I should say that my gain on capital-account was 24 per cent. It is only because such net profit is possible, and is made annually by the better class of grocers, that there is any justification for the investment of any capital whatever in the grocery business. Were it not for such profits, or if the profits were apt to be anything like as limited as on stocks and bonds, surely it were better to invest in stocks and bonds of the best and soundest issues, and let somebody else do the hard work. Then truly would we be simply "employing our capital."

To Find Net Margin.

The merchant of to-day finds first his gross returns on a transaction, or, in the case of the retail merchant, a series of transactions, and from that gross return, the known AVERAGE expense is deducted. What is left is net margin. Sugar pays a margin on the sale of, say, 7 per cent. The cost of doing business, on the average, is about 13 per cent. Thus, apparently, sugar does not pay its way. Thus also the wary grocer is ever watchful for items which pay more than enough to make a net profit and carry some of the unearned expense on the sugar, and flour, and cereal account. And it is jusst because the margin is so narrow and the hundreds of transactions have to be watched so vigilantly, that the wise merchant protects himself on every hand from the possibility of miscalculation; and gives himself the benefit of all the short cuts.

I think I am safe in assuring Mr. Jamieson, whose line of business I do not know, but should be pleased to know about, that this matter is one of much more than curious interest to the grocer; nor will any trite answer, like the old saw about two wrongs, quite clean up the account.

Practical Methods in Retal Stores

London Merchant Believes in Ice Cream Parlor as a Business Magnet—Place and Value of Good Store Fixtures in Grocery Business—An Interesting Easter Window Display in Chatham —How Clerks in Department Stores are Taught to be Vigilant.

Believes in Ice Cream Parlor.

London, Ont., April 20. — Harry Coates, corner of Stanley street and Wharncliffe road, has the only grocery store in London with an ice cream parlor in connection. It was planned when the store was built a couple of years ago, and with equipment, cost about $500. The soda fountain, furniture, and appointments generally are good.

Mr. Coates told The Grocer this week that the ice cream department would be continued this summer. He estimates that a sale of sixteen gallons of ice cream per week will mean a profit on this branch of the business. During last season the sale was more like ten gallons a week, and this could hardly be regarded profitable, except by taking into consideration the advertising value of bringing people into the store, especially non-customers.

In view of the absence of special advertising, and considering the time it takes people to find out that such an ice cream depot exists, better results may be looked for in future. South London has a population of 10,000, and the Coates grocery is the only one in a large area of the suburb.

Such a branch could not well be conducted if the store were to close early each evening, as the department is in the rear and to the east of the main store. But, as is usually the case with stores in the residential sections, it is open fairly late in the evening. Obviously, too, the work requires additional help—in this case a young lady who is given occasional assistance by other clerks.

An Easter Window.

Chatham, Ont., Apr. 20.—A white hen and eight fluffy yellow chicks formed the central attraction of an Easter window display put on by Wm. Anderson. The hen and chickens occupied the foreground, being roofed in with poultry netting, the ends of the "run" being blocked with canned goods, a row of cans being also displayed along the very front of the run. In the background, on a level with the top of the run, were shown fresh vegetables, canned goods and flowers, of which last the Anderson grocery always makes a feature at the Easter season. Live things seem to exert a fascination over the mind, for there was scarcely a passer-by who didn't stop to watch the chickens scratching; and, though the latter had no significance so far as the grocery trade is concerned, being merely typical of the Easter season, they doubtless served to attract attention to the other goods displayed.

Getting Rid of Loafers.

Peterboro, Apr. 20.—A local dealer recently said: "I had been considerably troubled by loafers about the store, men who would come in, occupy the chairs, and lean against the counter and discuss all the problems of the day. Besides taking up a great deal of my time, I found that their presence was offensive to lady customers, so I decided to get rid of them. I began to gradually take the chairs away, keeping them behind the counter so I could offer one to any customer I wished. Those places which they used to lean against, I covered with displays, so that this was impossible. I found that without any place to lounge, they would not hang around, and I succeeded in getting rid of them without in any way offending them."

Information Clearing House.

Vancouver, B. C., Apr. 20.—"I find," said a grocer of this city, "that by working in unison with nearby grocers I can almost eliminate the bad debts which eat up a large share of the profits in many retail stores. We know each other's customers pretty well. Last week a lady, whom I knew had been dealing up the street, came in and said she would like to open an account with me. I gave her a few groceries and immediately made enquiries from this grocer about her credit. I learned that she had run a bill of over $25 with him, and had come to me when he had asked for payment. She was, probably, going to repeat the same thing with me, but from the information I received I cut her off my list, saving myself. All the grocers around here operate on the same plan, so that poor-pays have considerable difficulty in getting credit.

Vegetable Display Stand Sells.

Toronto, Apr. 20.—John F. Holloway believes in the selling power of good store equipment. He thinks that special display fixtures should be used whenever and wherever possible, by a grocer. Following out his belief, he uses in one of his windows a vegetable display stand which he looks upon as possessing a definite value in selling goods. This stand is made of metal, and consists of three shelves, large, smaller and small, arranged so as to revolve about a central pillar.

Through this a supply of fresh cold water is forced, breaking above on a shield of metal, into a misty spray that spreads itself over the vegetables piled about on the shelves of the stand.

"The stand has a pleasing appearance when one looks in from the street," said Mr. Holloway, "and I have no doubt but that it sells goods for me. Anyway, it keeps my vegetables looking appetizing and fresh, and does not wet anything else in the window."

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS:—

Sugar.—Advanced 10c.

Provisions.—Decline expected.

Dried Fruits.—Prices Firmer.

Montreal, Apr. 20th. — Sugar quotations were advanced ten cents on Tuesday of this week, and from later reports the new prices seem to have become general, as it was learned that they had been increased on the Halifax and other markets. While the raw market has exhibited signs of strength of late, the advance was somewhat of a surprise to the trade. The demand is fairly good, but offers no influence to the market. Refined, therefore, in the general opinion, simply acted in sympathy with the raw market. There is still quite an interim before the heavy demand for sugar will be felt, and with firm conditions in the primary market, consideration of the situation might not be amiss.

A wholesaler stated recently, in reviewing the dried fruit market, that prunes are practically double the price at which they were offered a year ago. Those sizes which the retailer could obtain for five cents a year ago are now worth ten, and in some cases the difference is said to be greater. In all lines of dried fruits the market is unusually strong. The demand is fair, and prices are not likely to suffer any diminution for some time to come.

With the opening of navigation, about the end of this month or perhaps a little earlier, business is expected to assume heavier proportions. It is claimed that buyers have been holding off with their orders to take advantage of water rates. Other jobbers admit a difference, but believe that it will not be very material. Whatever the value of the arguments on either side, the fact remains that there is generally a noticeable improvement in business after navigation opens and water routes begin to assume their regular schedules.

Easter trade was fair, and the past week, as the result of the previous demand, has been a little quieter. It is expected that for a short time business will be a little duller than has been experienced. The country roads are in the transitionary state, and have not yet lost their water constituency until the wind and sun have been able to combine a little longer. The farmer, therefore, is content to wait until they are more favorable; the retailer is forced to do likewise. Hence the situation! On the whole, business has been good, and even now no complaints are being heard.

It was reported here this week by one of the big jobbing houses that on June 1 puffed rice would be advanced 65 cents a case. They are now quoted at $3.60, and the new price is said to be $4.25 a case.

There has been a better demand for summer cereals of late, but it is light yet. Rolled oats and wheat are still supreme, and wholesalers say that they are never really ousted from their position among the trade.

Sugar.—The market soared ten cents on Tuesday, a movement that came more or less as a surprise to the local trade. The strength of the primary market was realized, but it was not anticipated that the advance would come at this time. There is a fair business passing, but on the whole trade in sugar has been limited and rather quiet.

Dried Fruits. — A continuation of gradually diminishing stocks and prices gradually increasing, a condition that has obtained for some time now, is still the character of the market. Demand is fairly good, especially considering the existing market conditions. Prunes have certainly fulfilled all the expectations that were entertained regarding them when the season opened. The price to the retailer is now easily double that which was quoted to them a year ago. Some say that it is even more than that, but in any case the difference is considerable. The retailer with a good stock of evaporated apples just now is indeed fortunate, and so is the wholesaler. It was pointed out in these columns last fall, when prices began to pass the seven cent mark, that with apples a light crop, evaps. looked promising, and so have they proved.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—The market is now practically stripped of blueberries. There are no doubt some stocks left here and there, but they are believed to be very light. Among the big jobbers there is at least no fear of being caught with a surplus of supplies. For instance, the new strawberries will soon be arriving, but the old stocks will scarcely meet the demand until the new goods arrive. It is just possible that some lines will not be exhausted, but they are few, and hardly worth considering. Peas may be referred to, in the same way. Light stocks, no surplus, and on the whole a trade that is not worrying about what they will do with holdover goods. The absence of this feature is at least one consolation. The situation is much the same as a week ago, the changes now to be expected being for the most part diminishing stocks, as there are no other sources to draw from. Stocks of canned raspberries, peaches, plums and other fruits are becoming light, and are nearing the end of their tethers. Corn and tomatoes are moving out easily.

TORONTO—Canned vegetable trade is by no means large but a steady trade on a hand to mouth basis is being done. Dealers are not making the efforts to push sales that they would if they feared there might be a possibility of being left at the end of the season with surplus stocks on hand. Canned apples are moving out nicely at $1.20 for 3s and $3.50 to $3.60 for gallons. In both fruits and canned fish, retailers are purchasing for immediate needs only, but as one dealer remarked, "they need not do this in hopes that prices will drop, as I believe that with the present sales even if it is only in small lots, that prices will at least remain steady."

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advanced 10 cents.
Prunes—Up 1 cent.

Toronto, Apr. 20.—Sugar advanced 10 cents per cwt. on Tuesday of this week bringing Toronto quotations up to $4.70. This advance took place suddenly but was not altogether unexpected as it was believed that an upward movement would take place when refiners again went into the market to make purchases. Perhaps the movement was hastened by bullish reports concerning the Cuban crop. A report based upon the production of those centrals that have finished grinding, places this year's output of the Island at 800,000 tons short of last year or 40 per cent. less than last year. If this report is any way nearly correct, it would indicate a continued firmer market. Raws even at the advance show considerable strength. The amount of trade as usual in April is not large.

Prunes have taken another step upward, quotations being advanced 1 cent per pound. Stocks on hand are decidedly small and retailers have little choice of sizes. The same is true of evaporated apples, while peaches and apricots, taxed by the scarcity of prunes and "evaps," are firm.

A report of the growing crops in California says, "Apricot crop will be considerably less than last year, the production varying in different districts. Prospects for peaches in most districts are good but there are indications of a somewhat smaller crop. Prune trees are blooming well but they almost always do this. Indications, however, at present are good. There is danger of frost for the growing crops for a few weeks yet."

Trade is inclined to be quiet this week being of a sorting nature, dealers having purchased larger supplies before Easter so that they do not need to make any large purchases this week. With the opening of navigation, an improvement in the general grocery trade is looked for as it will mean an increase in business through lake points. It is stated that some dealers are now holding back on their purchases awaiting for the lower freight rates.

Beans on account of slackness in trade showed an easier feeling last week but have again stiffened up in price.

Sugar—Sugar prices advanced 10 cents per cwt. on Tuesday of this week. This upward movement was a surprise because it came suddenly but was not at all unexpected, for as pointed out before, holders have the situation pretty well in hand and the upward movement was expected when refiners had to again make purchases. The market shows considerable strength at the advance and indications, barring unexpected developments, seem to point to a continuance of this firmness. Advices from Cuba gives the number of centrals grinding as only 125, compared with 149 last year and 144 in 1909. It is suggested that possibly 400,000 tons Javas may also be shipped to the United States; but with Europe considerably above Cubas, the Cuban holders seem to have control. Locally trade is only normal at present.

Dried Fruits—Further advances in the price of prunes will not come as a surprise to dealers who have been watching the market at all. Several months ago the scarcity was noticeable and the situation has steadily been growing more acute. The further advance of 1 cent., bringing 90-100s up to 11½, was only what could be expected. Stocks on this market are decidedly scarce and one wholesale house is said to have only a few boxes left, while all agree that their stocks are extremely small. It has arrived at a stage where the retailer has no choice as to size, as those houses which are fortunate to have some left yet can offer only a couple of sizes. The scarcity is particularly noticeable in the small and medium sizes. The high price and scarcity in this line which generally enjoys such a large trade has put a still firmer tone on those lines which are called on to take their place such as apricots, peaches and figs. A firmer feeling is noticeable in Hallowees dates but the trade in this line just now is not large.

Tea. — One dealer in speaking of the tea situation remarked that the world's consumption of tea is steadily on the increase, and especially is this so in the kinds that are the most largely used in this country. With no increase in production and a decrease in some cases, lower values in tea could hardly be looked for. Thompson's tea circular for week ending March 30 says: "Sales have about met the trade's requirements, although among Indian teas there was some slackness noticeable in the bidding for red stalky teas below 9d. which in some cases were neglected and failing to realize valuations, withdrawn. The market for the more desirable kinds however closes strong. Ceylon teas sustained a good demand for the better kinds, with the same irregularity noticeable in lower grades as among Indian teas."

Coffee.—A steady trade continues in coffee on this market with prices showing no further change. A recent coffee report says: "Statistically speaking, coffee is in a very strong position. The total receipts of Rio and Santos coffees from July 4, 1910, to April 1, 1911, are 9,858,000 bags against 13,987,000 bags same time last year. From what source is this deficiency to be made good? The new crop is not large enough at its highest estimate to supply the yearly demand for Brazil coffee, and the outlook for the crop to blossom next September is far from encouraging. From a purely technical point of view, therefore, the market in the face of decreasing visible and invisible supplies shows more strength than it did before."

Nuts.—The amount of business in nuts is small. Retailers apparently have not got over the habit of allowing the nut trade to take care of itself. It is pointed out that this is a good time to push the sales of Brazil nuts as the new crop is just coming on the market. Prices are ruling high at 19 cents.

Sugar—Firm.
Muscatel Raisins—Advancing.
Syrup—Advanced.

Winnipeg, April 20.—Trade during the week has been handicapped considerably on account of the condition of the roads and of the holiday season. A transition period, from winter into spring, is now in progress and with the warm weather that has been prevailing during the last week the country roads in many parts of the newer districts have become almost untraversable, and except where railroad traveling was available little business was done. In coniunction with this the arrival of Easter has also had some effect on the volume of orders turned in. Practically all the travelers who were in easy reach of Winnipeg, or other large cities throughout the West, went in for the week end. The heavy rains and snowfall which prevailed for three days almost over the entire west has as yet had no effect on the trade. It might be detrimental to the roads, but it has nevertheless put the land in excellent condition for the seed, and consequently farmers in many districts which were badly in need of moisture are feeling more enthusiastic than ever regarding the prospects of the new crop.

As was mentioned above, a general falling off in all lines of the trade is noticed, yet predictions by the wholesalers are that with the arrival of the rain before seeding, the orders from country points will be almost doubled. Sugar continues to be in active demand and is holding steady. Muscatel raisins are getting scarce and advancing, while syrup has advanced. Spring goods such as brooms, washing soda, cleansing powders of all descriptions, etc., are now being asked for in large quantities, as spring cleaning is expected to be general throughout the West before long.

Sugar.—Prices remain steady on the local market with a fairly active trade. No large stocks are being laid in at present by retailers as many are waiting till the opening of navigation on the chance that a reduction will take place. Wholesalers, on the other hand, as stated last week, still predict that the change will be upwards rather than downwards from the present outlook.

Dried Fruits.—Muscatel raisins were the dark horse this week in the dried fruit market. Stocks of these raisins are becoming very low with the result that prices are advancing, and many are claiming that they will soon be as scarce as prunes. This is the direct result of stock-taking which showed supplies to be lower than was anticipated. Apricots and prunes are still at last week's advance, but it is expected that a further advance will be seen before the month is out. All other lines are strong and no reduction of any description is on the horizon.

Syrup and Molasses.—A general advance of five cents per case has taken place in syrup, as was expected last week. There is still a good demand for corn syrup for use in the many construction camps of all descriptions, and fairly heavy stocks are held at present. New molasses and maple syrup have not as yet found their way to the western markets but it is expected that they will in the near future. It is not expected, however, that it will have much effect on present prices.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, B.C., April 20.—Fifteen carloads of potatoes are being brought from Ontario to supply the market here. This necessary article is still scarce. Prices can hardly be quoted, as they are already high.

Tomatoes from Mexico are in fair quantities. They are about the same in quality and price with the tomato from Florida. Owing to their proximity to the California market they are displacing the Florida grown.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

The St. Vincent Arrowroot Growers and Exporters Association, St. Vincent, B.W.I., have made preparations for the extension of the sale of St. Vincent arrowroot in Canada. That the association has an article of a high reputation to offer is beyond contradiction and there is no question that the sales will rapidly increase in this country. As will be seen by the advertisement in this issue samples and information will be forwarded on requests being made to the secretary. Dealers who are first to get behind St. Vincent arrowroot will reap the greatest benefits from stocking it and extending its sale. Representations were made last year to the Royal Commission on Trade Relations between Canada and the West Indies to have the existing duty on arrowroot imported into Canada removed. This was particularly urged, since it was claimed by St. Vincent that it practically controlled the entire production of this article. Should this duty be removed, as seems probable St. Vincent arrowroot will command much greater attention on the Canadian market.

The Toronto office of the Quaker Oats Co. have a splendid photograph of some of the teams and drays that assisted in unloading 10 carloads of Quaker Oats sold to Toronto wholesalers on Monday, April 10. The teams are lined up alongside the pavement from one street to another and present an appearance of prominence equalled only by the goods this company manufactures.

In their palmiest days, the premises now occupied by the Halifax Cold Storage Co., Halifax, N.S., never presented such a scene of activity as now in evidence daily. All the wharves are occupied by Lunenburg bankers on their first baiting. Among the recent arrivals the recently launched schooner Doris M. Myra has been the subject of much favorable comment, and is well worth seeing by those interested in the operations of Nova Scotia ship builders. Besides the fleet of splendid 99 ton schooners and the hourly changing, arrival and departure of gasoliners and sailing craft of all sizes, at Boutilier's wharf, the refrigerating plant, ice houses, bait stores, smoke houses and up-to-date equipment, were viewed by a group of our legislators last week, with great interest.

EARLY CLOSING IN OTTAWA.

Grocers Say It is Stronger Than Ever—New Officers Elected.

Ottawa, Apr. 20.—The following officers were elected at the last meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association:—President, A. G. Johnson (accl.); 1st vice-president, F. W. Forde; 2nd vice-president, F. Fowler; treasurer, Duncan Bell (accl.); secretary, T. W. Collins (accl.); executive, H. C. Ellis, Wm. York, Wm. Mitchell, C. B. McLean, J. Bambrick, auditors, W. J. Eastcott, A. P. Johnson.

The president ran over the work of the year. In regard to the early closing by-law, he thought they were stronger than ever. Referring, however, to a grievance of the fruiterers as to the classification of tomatoes and celery and the enforcement of the by-law Mr. Johnson made an interesting observation. He had seen Chief Ross about these matters and the latter had told him he had more trouble with these early closing by-laws than any other, and wished they were done away with.

The treasurer reported that there was a sum in the treasury of about $500.

Several matters were discussed including the securing of permanent quarters for the association.

OPPOSITION FOR MR. MAXWELL.

R. M. A. to Have Speakers Oppose Him on His Co-operative Society Tour.

Montreal, April 20.—W. Maxwell, of Rothesay, Scotland, has arrived in Canada, and in a series of lectures will promote the co-operative society idea. He is president of the International Co-Operative Alliance which in the Old Country is reported to be strong. The Retail Merchants Association of Canada have arranged to have speakers reply in opposition to his campaign and would like the merchants in any town in which a Maxwell lecture may be held to notify the board. Also to forward advance information of when any of his lectures are to take place. It is believed that this Old Country co-operative concern are looking for a market for the goods they manufacture. It is claimed they have shipped considerably to Australia.

What Would John Wanamaker Say About Red Rose Tea?

This is what he says about advertising goods:—

"Advertising is making the goods "speak. It is putting a truthful, ani- "mate tongue into inanimate merchan- "dise.

"Merchandise itself cannot lie. Soon- "er or later its true character will "develop—in its use—in the satisfac- "tion it gives to the owner.

"When exaggerated or false state- "ments are made about goods, it is a "human tongue that talks or a human "hand that writes; it is not the mer- "chandise that speaks—therefore it is "not advertising."

Have you ever known an exaggerated or false statement on behalf of Red Rose Tea? Have you ever known of any "catch penny" methods being used to sell it? Have you ever known anyone connected with the business to adopt any underhand method of securing orders; or, has Red Rose Tea in daily use fully borne out all the claims made for it; has every method of selling the tea been in every respect legitimate and honorable; has every Red Rose Tea salesman been manly, straightforward, and above suspicion of anything underhanded?

If John Wanamaker knew as much about Red Rose Tea as you, and other merchants all through Canada, know, I believe he would say "it has made good in every respect." Nothing else would account for the continued and increasing confidence displayed toward it by the many thousands of merchants who sell it and the hundreds of thousands of people who drink it.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S TRADE.

Budget of News and Happenings From The Old Colony.

St. John's, Newfoundland, April 20.—Trade has been exceptionally dull this winter, but last week matters brightened somewhat and all stores report an increase in sales. The unusual severe and stormy weather is in part responsible, as very little fish could be handled and labor all around was scarce. Last week we had five foreign arrivals, which gave considerable labor and boomed trade.

We have had, to date, two arrivals from the seal fishery, with good trips; reports from them are encouraging, and the voyage, while not large, will be up to the average. The amount of money put in circulation by this industry, will be beneficial. Steamers now will be arriving every day, and for a month or more, St. John's will be a busy port. A successful seal fishery is a great impetus to trade, and makes dealers optimistic as to the outcome of the year.

Prices for produce remain firm, stocks of fish held by our merchants are small, and $6.50 per quintal Talqual could be easily procured for fish last week

The lobster fishery will soon be opening, and high prices are expected to prevail. Buyers now are giving $15 to $16 per case for any offering.

The local market is a bit excited over sugar, and last week considerable buying and selling was done between local dealers.

Dried fruit has been scarce in the market lately, but the last arrivals from New York relieved the tension. One of the largest wholesale dealers had a shipment from New York, of about 50,000 lbs. Prices are higher than for some years past.

J. E. Ray, the Canadian Trade Commissioner, has left Newfoundland and his successor is expected to arrive in St. John's shortly.

T. T. Cartwright, representative of E. W. Gillett Co., Ltd., of Toronto, is in town on his annual visit.

Arrival of Eggs is Duller This Week

Slightly Firmer Feeling on Account of Short Supply — Thought to be Only Temporarily—Provisions Exhibit an Easier Feeling—More Attention Being Given to Pork Products—Butter is Easier on Some Markets.

Easter was responsible for an increase in trade in some lines of provisions, and now with the Lenten season past, pork products will likely come in for more attention than has been given them for some time past. The merchant who compares prices now with those ruling a year ago will find an argument that should be of use to him in pushing these lines. Another incentive to the merchant is the larger margin of profit which he is able to get, as during the high prices last year, profits had to be cut close, so that he was inclined to give attention to other lines.

The Chicago market in live hogs has ruled quite steady this week, as has also the Toronto market, while Montreal records a drop of 25 to 50 cents. The Winnipeg market has also a lower tendency. Provisions generally under the depressed hog market exhibit an easier feeling.

The delivery of eggs this week has dropped off considerably, and has caused a temporary stiffening of prices on some markets. Several reasons are put forward for the present curtailment of supply. Some dealers believed that the exceptionally large demand throughout the country for the Easter trade had cleaned supplies up pretty well. Others attributed the lack of supplies to the bad roads which have prevented the delivery of supplies by the farmers, while it was hinted by others that country dealers were starting to put stocks away.

An increase in supplies has caused an easier feeling in butter on some markets. As the season advances, and the new make becomes larger, the effect will likely be felt on prices. However, the amount of old butter on the different markets will be a factor in determining prices, and if large, will help it on its downward tendency. One dealer was inclined to look for higher prices. "The slow arrival during the past month has used up a large quantity of the old make," he said, "and another thing is that the time is approaching when combination factories which make both butter and cheese usually turn from butter to the making of cheese."

Cheese, honey and poultry are quiet and prices show no change.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The market in live and dressed hogs is slightly weaker, the price being from 25 to 50 cents lower. In lard and provisions the tendency is downward, and it would not be surprising to learn of a general decline within a week. The weakness in the primary market is about ready to extend to the general list.

Butter.—Receipts have been coming forward more freely, with a weakening effect on the market. At the opening meeting of the Eastern Townships Dairymen's Exchange at Cowansville last Saturday 564 boxes of butter were offered. Only two buyers were present, and as there was no bidding no sales were made. It is expected that by the 22nd over 1,000 boxes will be offered. A large volume of goods are expected to be boarded at this exchange during the coming season.

Eggs.—Receipts have been somewhat lighter of late, but the demand following Easter declined to a certain extent. The market has, as a result, been steady and inclined to quietness. The arrivals of eggs since the first of May to the present have been considerably in excess of the receipts for the same time last year. The Easter demand was decidely heavy, and reports locally bespeak a good trade. Dealers were well stocked up for the holiday and have during the early part of the week bought rather light.

Provisions.—The easier feeling in the lard market which was reported last week has resulted in a reduction of ½ cent per pound and the pure article in tierces is quoted 10¾ to 11 cents. The only other change this week is in rolled bacon which has been reduced 1 cent per pound. Live hogs are steady at last week's prices. Arrivals have not been large. Butter.—Butter shows a slight reduction in price this week, arrivals of both dairy and creamery having been larger. Fresh creamery is quoted at 28 cents and dairy prints at 21 to 22 cents. Demand is fairly brisk, creamery coming in for a good share of the trade. With larger arrivals in the future expected, it looks as if the market will not at least rule higher for a time.

Eggs.—Arrival of eggs has been greatly curtailed this week and the market for the present is firmer with dealers asking 18 to 19 cents. However, the shortness of supply is thought to be only temporary and dealers believe that supplies will be larger with a corresponding easiness in price in a short time.

Cheese.—The cheese market is not exhibiting much life at the present time. The high prices ruling are affecting demand to a certain extent. Prices, however, are steady. Factories in various parts of Ontario are commencing operations.

Provisions.—The expected decline in lard has taken place and a fair reduction will be noticed. This came in view of the fact that the price of live hogs both for bacon and lard purposes has been steadily dropping for the last month. Reports from Chicago indicate that country will have an exceptionally heavy crop of hogs to market this summer and one large packer has predicted that live hogs will sell at 4 cents per pound before Christmas. With prices steadily falling to the south of us it is expected that local dealers will force the price down for live animals up here. This week dealers are only offering 6¾ cents per pound live weight off cars Winnipeg, which is a reduction of ¼ cent per pound from last week and ¾ cent per pound from two weeks ago. In spite of the reduction in the live weight prices no reduction for the cured meats or dressed hogs has as yet taken place but it is expected that this will occur in a few days. Prevailing prices are as follows :—

Eggs.—Manitoba fresh eggs are the only ones being offered on the market at present and are coming in large quantities with the result that prices have been steadily dropping. The demand for Easter has been extremely heavy but local stocks have been heavy enough to supply all orders. Present prices are 17 cents per dozen.

Cheese—New prices are quoted for cheese this week. Demand has been improving and the market has advanced ½ a cent per pound. Old cheese is now offered at 14½ to 15 cents per pound, and new at 13½ to 14 cents per pound.

Butter.—Trade continues to be active. Supplies of cream coming into the city continues to increase and consequently the increased output is able to supply the increased demand. Receipts of dairy butter also heavy. Present prices are :

Flour is Steady at Recent Decline

Decline in Price Has Caused Little Improvement in Trade—Dealers are Buying in Small Quantities Only—Wheat Advanced on Saturday Last But Reacted Slightly—Cereals are Unchanged.

Manitoba flour is steady at last week's decline of 30 cents per barrel. On the whole there has been little improvement in trade, for while the reduction in price has caused a little more buying it has been in small quantities only.

Wheat prices are a little firmer than a week ago. Values advanced on Saturday last, May wheat in Chicago reaching 91⅜ but re-acted on Monday under bearish news, it is said, in respect to Canadian reciprocity to 90 cents, compared with 106⅝ a year ago.

A recent dispatch from New York says: "Were the estimates of the winter wheat yield which were based on the government's April crop report borne out in the actual crop this year, productions of this cereal would exceed all previous records. It is recognized, of course, that last week's estimate of 541,000,000 bushels does not take into account a reduction in the acreage as estimated last December on account of winter damage. Neither does it make allowance for any possible deterioration in conditions between April 1 and the time of harvest, the estimate being made on the so-called old system. After making allowance for several of these factors it would appear reasonable to expect a crop fairly in excess of last year." However, it should be remembered that this only pertains to the United States, one factor only in the determination of wheat values.

Dealers state that the reduction in rail and water rates on wheat will not affect the market to any great extent. Wheat that is now being used is that which was bought during the time of the low rate last year and which has been held at lake ports.

The cereal situation is unchanged. A normal trade only is being done with slight improvement in export enquiries at times.

The Canadian visible supply of wheat on April 17 was 12,272,000 bushels compared with 12,454,000 on April 18 of last year and 8,346,000 bushels on April 19, 1909.

TORONTO.

Flour. — Manitoba flour is steady at the recent decline. The new business is not large in volume, the reduction in flour having failed to stimulate demand to any great extent, most of the buying being done in small quantities. No. 1 Northern Manitoba wheat was held as high as 99 cents on Saturday last but re-acted to 97½ cents at the beginning of the week in accordance with the decline at Chicago.

TAKE TARIFF OFF SUGAR.

St. Louis, Mo., April 20.—A committee of wholesale grocers composed of men from all sections of the country has started a fight for a reduction of the tariff on sugar. In this they will probably be aided by the retailers who are now, in a majority of cases, selling this commodity at a direct and actual loss. They point out that sugar is a necessity that is taxed more heavily than any luxury and that the burden is borne by the grocery trade and the consuming public. A reduction in the tariff would mean that the retail grocers could buy sugar cheaper and get proportionately better prices, allowing them to make a fair profit instead of doing, as too many do now, sell this product at a loss. It would have the same effect upon the wholesale trade, many members of which do not handle sugar at all, when they can get out of it.

FOR WRAPPED BREAD ONLY.

Detroit retail grocers have gone on record as being in favor of having nothing but wrapped bread on sale in Detroit. The association has appealed to the board of health to aid in the campaign, charging that bread contaminated by soiled hands of deliverymen, by falling on floors and made unclean in other ways is a menace to health.

SOME OLD POULTRY.

Ten tons of cold storage poultry have been seized and condemned in Cincinnati. Some of the goods had been in storage for five years, being stamped "1905."

The unvarying and lasting crispness of Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas is the strongest imaginable selling argument and it's always a winner.

Florida Tomatoes Advance in Price

Crop Not as Large as at First Expected—Prices in Florida Have Taken Sharp Advance—Easter Trade Quite Satisfactory —Continued Warm Weather Would Improve Business — Bermuda and Egyptian Onions on the Market—Spanish About Done.

It was noted last week that tomato prices would likely go upward in price. This has been the case and values have already improved and will likely go higher. The crop this year has not been as large as at first expected. A report from Florida on tomatoes says: "The market has taken a sharp advance. Every indication points to a strong market in Florida on tomatoes during the remainder of the season. Shipments will be lighter from now on." In British Columbia, shipments of tomatoes from Mexico are being received and are displacing the Florida article in that province.

As stocks of celery at the different points grow shorter in supply, prices go up. Some small lots may be brought in from United States markets with surplus supplies but prices will likely rule firm.

Some markets are rather bare of Spanish onions and as there are few home grown, it has been necessary to import other lines. Bermuda onions from Texas are in fairly good supply while some shipments of Egyptian onions have been received and are going out freely. The supply this year is short and prices are higher than other years.

Potatoes at most centres seem to be holding quite firm at present. In the West prices are high and British Columbia reports that several cars of Ontario are expected there, but there is such a general scarcity that prices there are expected to hold firm.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The firmer feeling which was noted in tomatoes last week has already resulted in a stiffening of prices, six basket crates being quoted at $3, while higher prices still are looked for by dealers. There is some California grapefruit on the market at $2.75 per case. Cocoanuts are ranging from $4.75 to $5 per sack this week and some dealers say they are doing a fair trade in this line. Apples are getting in rather short supply and $7.50 per barrel is being asked for No. 1 spies.

Vegetables.—As expected, the price of celery is higher this week, being quoted at $3.50. Stocks on this market are not large and prices will likely remain steady. Cucumbers are down to $1.75 per dozen while sweet potatoes are higher at $2.75 per hamper. Spanish onions are in very limited supply on this market but shipments of Texas Bermudas have arrived, with small quantities of Egyptian. The latter are quoted at $3.50 to $3.75 per case, which is higher than other years, but they are being taken up well. Potatoes still continue at the higher price of last week but some dealers are inclined to believe that the present stiffness in Ontarios is due to the conditions of the roads and that as soon as these improve that supplies will come forward in larger volume again.

Green fruit.—The market has opened up with considerable briskness with the first signs of spring weather. The improvement in the past week is quite noticeable and the local dealers are preparing to settle down for their annual summer run. Cranberries are particularly high just now, with short stocks and a steady, though limited demand. Lemons are a little easier in price. Tne demand is steadily increasing. Pineapples are also coming in for more consideration.

TO BE ENOUGH APRICOTS.

A California report on apricots says: "The indications for the coming crop point to a short yield in sections, while in other districts prospects are favorable, but taking all in all, we are inclined to feel that present indications are that there will be enough apricots to go around."

Fish - Oysters

With Lent Past Fish Trade is Quieter

However Volume of Trade is Quite Satisfactory for This Time of the Year—Dealers Expect a Steady Trade — Demand for Fresh Fish Will Increase Now—More Fresh Fish on Eastern Coast.

As can be expected after the close of the Lenten season, there is a noticeable drop in the demand for all kinds of fish. However, the trade in the future is expected to be of a steady character, and even this week the volume of business passing is fairly satisfactory.

While there is still excellent quality stocks of frozen fish being held at most points, still the trade as the season advances will turn more to the fresh caught. Already a fair trade is being done, but the number of kinds of fresh fish are as yet small.

Nova Scotia reports that the weather conditions have been more favorable of late, and the fishermen met with better results on the banks. Nearly fifty thousand pounds of fresh fish were landed at Halifax last week, comprising halibut, cod and haddock.

QUEBEC.

Montreal. — With the Lenten and Easter seasons now over there is a noticeable drop in the demand for all kinds of fish. Yet the volume of business passing is pretty satisfactory. The close season for dore and pickerel began on April 15th.

Shad are coming in more freely now, while new fillets and haddies are pretty plentiful.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax. — Nearly fifty thousand pounds of fish were landed here this week by vessels of the local banking fleet. The fish comprised halibut, cod and haddock. There was some improvement in the weather conditions during the week and as a result the fishermen met with better success on the banks. All the dealers reported a heavy demand for fish week, much greater than in past years, for the closing week of Lent. In fact the fish business this Lenten season was better than ever before, that is regarding the demand and the prices for a number of lines of fish. It was a hard season on the dealers, as it kept them on the move all the time getting in supplies. When the local supplies failed, some of them had to import fish. Then the lobster catch dwindled to practically nothing, and prices went upwards. There is a slight improvement in the lobster catch this week, but so small that it has had no effect on prices, which still remain at 20 cents each for small stock. The canneries are not doing a great deal at the present time, but with favorable weather the catch will improve.

Boston dealers smile at the report that lobsters will reach one dollar per pound. With improved weather conditions the dealers are looking for a substantial drop in prices.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—As can be expected immediately after the Lenten season, trade in fish is rather quiet this week. From now on dealers do not expect any great rush but look for an even steady trade. Dealers are waiting for the arrival of fresh caught fish in quantities, but up to the present the range is confined to about six different kinds. Fresh caught white fish are quoted 2 cents higher this week at 14 cents.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—The closing week of Lent saw the fish market fairly well supplied though prices were rather higher than usual. Fresh haddock sold at 4 cents, cod at 3 cents, halibut, 10 to 15 cents, Gaspereaux at $3 per hundred, and imported fish at the usual prices. Dry cod continue scarce and high, the quotations now being, $4.00 to $4.50 for small fish and $6.50 to $6.60 for large. Pollock are quoted at $4.50. Grand Manan herring are offered in half-barrels at $2.75 and in barrels at $5.25. Pickled shad in half-barrels are worth $8 to $12. Finnan haddies are 5½ to 6 cents per pound and kippered herring 30 cents per dozen.

DRIED FRUIT PRICES.

This has certainly been a noteworthy year in dried fruits as far as high prices are concerned. There has been a general advance in all lines since a year ago. Just now prunes are selling at the highest price in the history of the Canadian trade. However with the high prices the merchant who kept his dried fruit trade up, has displayed qualities of salesmanship that will be helpful to him.

Just because prices advance is no reason that the grocer should give up pushing any line. People know there are causes for the advance in prices and the merchant who explains these to the customer and dwells on the points that show they should be bought at the advanced price will keep his trade to a great extent. Of course it requires a little more real salesmanship. The merchant who sold 80 to 90 size prunes last year at 3 lbs. for 25 cents, will find some difficulty in selling them at 14 cents per pound, but by pointing out their food qualities to customers he should be able to do so.

A comparison of prices ruling a year ago and now is interesting and is given below:—

Consumption of English Walnuts—Frozen Eggs in New Jersey —Fresh Egg Four Years Old—Salmon Fishing in British Columbia—Crop Prospects in California Point, Some Say, to Shortage in Apricots and Peaches — Petition in Chicago to Abolish Fee System.

The consumption of English walnuts last year exceeded 50,000,000 pounds, about half of which were imported from England, France and Spain. Importations increased from 12,000,000 pounds eight years ago to 27,000,000 pounds in 1908, in the face of America's production was 50 per cent. greater in 1908 than in 1902.

About 2,500 carloads of walnuts were shipped from California during the past season, being the product of 27,000 acres of walnut orchards. However, many of the trees in California are small, so that with the increase in acreage, the production ought to increase materially from year to year. This is but a young industry in California, the oldest orchard being less than 40 years old, while nearly half the trees are less than 13 years old.

In view of the frozen egg case in Montreal, much interest has been aroused there by the judgment rendered in the United States District Court at Trenton, N.J., where a frozen egg case brought by the government against a Boston firm, went against the government, the tests of the bacteriologists being refuted. It was shown that the eggs contained 10,000,000 to 29,000,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter, but judgment was rendered on the grounds that though the eggs were decomposed in the scientific meaning of the word, this was not the meaning of the statute.

A despatch from Rochester says that Henry Burns, of Hornell, Iowa, purchased some eggs in a grocery store. The grocer said they were freshly laid. Burns examined one and found his name and address, written thereon while he was employed at a cold storage plant four years ago.

To prevent the over-exploitation of the salmon fisheries of British Columbia and the consequent depletion by canneries and curing establishments, an order-in-council has been passed declaring that no boat will be allowed to engage in salmon fishing except under license from the Minister of Marine, while the number of boats which will be allowed to each cannery and curing establishment has been named. The canneries in all will be allowed 1990 boats.

A report of the general conditions for the coming season's crop of California fruit says that the state has been visited by timely and abundant rains, but it will be some time before an accurate idea can be formed of prospects for the crop. An opinion seems to rule among growers that prospects are not as good for the apricot crop as a year ago. This tree is not a regular bearer at best, and while there has been increased planting during the past few years, results will not be apparent for a couple of years. Growers are anticipating a lighter crop of peaches also. For the past few years the production has averaged 23,000 tons per annum, compared with 14,000 tons for the preceding three years. In prunes the average for the past three years has been 51,000 tons per year, compared with 62,000 tons for the preceding years. The trees are now looking in excellent shape and under favorable conditions we ought to have a good crop this season. The high prices of 1907 and 1908 has induced the planting of more raisin vines, which will begin to produce this year.

A petition of protest will be made to the mayor and council of Chicago against the fee system for testing scales, weights and measures, now in use in that city. It is maintained that the inspections are made solely in the public interest, and for that reason the public should pay for the service rendered; in other words that the cost of maintaining the department should come out of the general tax fund. New York, Boston and some other large United States cities have abolished the fee system.

Last year about 7,000 cars of Bermuda onions were shipped out of southwest Texas. This year it is maintained that this production will be almost doubled.

The soil in many parts of British Columbia has been found to be suitable for the cultivation of the tobacco plant, and it is probable that this industry will be taken up in that province at no distant date.

The fishing industry of the Pacific Coast produced in the year 1910, the enormous amount of 523,391,601 pounds of food fishes and fish products, valued at $39,706,400 of which British Columbia contributed $8,602,306. The industry in British Columbia requires the labor of 19,500 persons and their earnings total $5,580,000. British Columbia shows a more varied industry than any other district on the coast with the exception of Alaska, for having the most valuable halibut fisheries in the world, for her herring fisheries in the vicinity of Nanaimo, not being eclipsed on the coast, and for the remarkable whale fisheries off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

PROGRESS OF JAMAICA.

The governor of Jamaica, reporting to the Imperial Government upon the trade of that colony says that a year of fair economic progress is indicated. He points out that a notable feature of the year's transactions was the excess in the value of the exports over that of the imports. The island, he says, is recovering from the effects of the cyclone of 1903 and ensuing droughts, and there no longer are importations of special lines to cover earthquake damages.

The principal articles of import were bread and biscuit, butter and substitutes, fish, both dried and salted; wheaten flour, condensed milk, oils, pork and rice. Of soap also there were heavy importations.

The governor, in making his report makes mention of the apparent absurdity of the country, which he says is admirably fitted for the raising of cattle, pigs and so on, having to import so much condensed milk, butter substitutes and culinary oils.

The imports from Canada have doubled during the past ten years, but are hardly greater, the governor says, than they were thirty years ago.

Suggests That Magistrate Be Debt Collector

Editor Canadian Grocer.—The retail merchants of Ontario who have on several occasions applied to their government for a cheaper and more expedious method of collecting small debts are pleased to see through your editorial that their friends in Manitoba are moving in the same direction and have petitioned their government for this needed legislation.

That the desired change is necessary is evident from the fact that the old machinery is so ineffective that on an average it costs about $3 to collect one. If any other piece of machinery could not produce better results it would be put out of business at once.

As a matter of necessity the retail merchants have at times to give credit to their customers. This is highly appreciated and often prevents hardship and suffering, but occasionally this kindness is abused and in consequence dealers are put to all sorts of trouble and expense to get their money. Instead of the law helping them it is so expensive and ineffective that many merchants will rather lose their accounts than go to law. This is known to those characters who will buy without intending to pay, and, on account of them, credit is often refused to deserving people.

While the Manitoba merchants are on the right track in asking for what they call "debt courts" presided over by a magistrate, but when they ask that the magistrates be given authority to sentence for a term of imprisonment, should default in payment be made, they are asking for something they are not likely to receive. But instead of merely passing judgment the magistrate should take it in hand to collect the account. He should find out the circumstances of the debtor and then cause him to pay so much each week or month, and in case, through some unforseen circumstances he is unable to meet this payment he must appear before the magistrtate on a certain date and give his reasons for not making the payment. If he does not appear, then the magistrate shodld have power to imprison him for contempt of court. If he does appear and his reasons are satisfactory, then the bench may extend the time, but he must continue to make his appearance before the magistrate. This wodld make the debtor do the walking instead of the creditor and he would soon try and get it settled and after that he would be more careful to buy on credit. Such a law could be carried out, and be a great benefit to the merchant and be no hardship to any one but those who deserve it.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—The Peanut

Some Points of Interest in Connection with the Little Holiday Edible and its Products—Its Large and Ever Increasing Sale —Peanut Butter Valuable as Food Product—Plant Springs into Air Like Vine, and Head Then Roots Again.

Peanuts are now being recognized as a very desirable and wholesome food, and the demand is everywhere increasing. Especially is this true in America. It has been estimated that upwards of $45,000,000 worth of peanuts are sold annually, and that sales are on the increase. Of course this enormous amount is not all sold in the nickel bag although this method of handling accounts for a good many in a year. Up to a few years ago the larger amount was consumed in this way, or shelled and salted, but of late it is offered to the public in a variety of form.

Besides being eaten from the shell and in salted shelled manner, it is also used in peanut candies in combination with pop corn and puffed rice, in the form of peanut butter and as peanut meal and salad oil.

Peanut Butter.

In this country peanut butter has not induced a large demand as yet but the trade is increasing, and there are bright prospects for its future. Peanut butter when spread on bread is claimed to contain as much nutriment as the combination of butter, eggs and meat while it is appetizing and delicious. There are also many dainty dishes which can be prepared.

The nuts should be roasted in the shell if peanut butter is to reach a state of highest perfection. By this method all the natural oil which is the nutriment of the peanut is retained. In making the butter the shelled peas are first slightly roasted care being taken that they be not scorched. Then when they have been put through the fanner to remove the thin brown covering on the nut, they are ground into a pulp. The oil in the grains as it leaves the mill gives the meal the appearance and consistency of putty. It is placed in bottles, or in tins. Salt is added by some manufacturers and then it is sealed up.

Its Advantages.

A recent article on the subject says: "There is no doubt that peanut butter has taken the place of butter and jams in many households and especially so when butter becomes high in price. An advantage which this product has is that it suits the taste of poor and rich alike, and it is stated by authorities that the nutrition in fifty peanuts is equal to that in four bananas and ten times as great as that contained in three apples, thus furnishing sustenance for the man who labors. It is on the table of the poor and middle class on account of the reasonable price of this food. It is on the table of the well to do for its daintiness and convenient uses."

It is most convenient as a picnic or camping food as it does not turn rancid or spoil in as short a time as butter or its substitutes, as it will keep in perfect condition for a long time if kept sealed.

The oil of the peanut also is an important factor commercially. It is in the same class as cottonseed and olive oil. It is of a higher grade than cotton seed oil and of somewhat lower value than the finest olive oil.

The peanut plant is a sort of trailing vine, resembling clover, has to be planted annually and grows to the height of 1 or 2 feet. Its growth is peculiar. It grows from the seeds upward into the air and then turns its head downward, works into the earth, where the pods grow and ripen. The climatic requirements of the peanut are a long season without frost, a comparatively light rainfall during the growing period, abundant sunshine and high temperature. They are successfully grown in many parts of the United States, especially Virginia, Tennessee, Carolina and Georgia. On account of the increased use, efforts are being made to extend its cultivation.

"We appreciate your paper very much and would greatly miss it if we were unable to purchase it."

This is an extract from a letter The Canadian Grocer received from a Port Arthur merchant the other day.

It is just another proof of its worth to the Canadian retail dealer who reads it carefully from week to week.

And it explains why advertising in The Grocer is profitable publicity. The advertisement gets a degree of attention it otherwise would not, because this paper is backed up by a reputation for quality, reliability and extensive circulation.

RIGHT IN YOUR LINE!

Don't let the druggist corner the big business offering in

Robinson's Patent Barley

It is a food and right in your line, and it is an article that is in daily use in thousands of Canadian homes. It is equally efficient as a food for infants and invalids and a generous display will invariably result in a quick sale. Remember the name when next ordering—Robinson's Syrup That Satisfies!

There's a steady demand in every locality for a good syrup—a demand which you can fill, and fill with profit to yourself by featuring

"CROWN BRAND" CORN SYRUP

This is a delicious syrup for table use, and is made from the finest selected white corn.

A little persuasion will induce your customers to buy a trial tin, and you may look forward with the utmost confidence to a regular succession of "repeats."

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S

Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

DOLLARS and CENTS

Versus

BRAINS and SENSE

A dollar safely banked is better than two dollars' worth of doubtful merchandise in the store. The daily depreciation in goods of questionable character is a steady and startlingly heavy drain on your invested capital. After all it is not so much a question of Dollars and Cents as Brains and Sense, when you are stocking up, friend.

Quality is the pivot on which your wheel-of-fortune turns constantly. It lubricates business. Without it you will be as helpless as a rudderless ship. With the Brains and Sense that you possess, you'll certainly stock the two quality articles that we list below:—

Griffin & Skelley's Canned Fruits

Picked by skillful hands, chosen by ever-watchful eyes, packed in the Factory of Precision—the best that Dollars and Cents and Brains and Sense can offer particular folks.

Canned Apricots, Peaches, Pears, Cherries, Plums and other wanted table fruits. Quality Goods!

Griffin & Skelley's Fine Asparagus

The natural, delicate, tender and toothsome quality of Griffin & Skelley's Asparagus is a bulwark of safety for the grocer who fears for the permanency of his over particular trade. The private beds that produce this famous brand are guarded night and day by those who, seeking with might and main to hold the high standard up, never relax their vigilance over the growing stalks.

Women have an instinctive dislike for peddlers, tea peddlers included. Women buy tea from peddlers in spite of this dislike, simply because the peddler offers what seems to be a better tea proposition than the grocers do.

It stands to reason that if you can offer your customers a better tea proposition than peddlers you can win back your own tea trade. And you can do this by selling

"MAYBELL" CEYLON TEA
in 5 and 10 lb. Decorated Chests

By selling "MAYBELL" you can offer your customers as good a quality, at as low a price, in as attractive a package and convenient a quantity, as any tea peddler in the business.

McCray Refrigerator

The cut shows our No. 410, the most popular of our grocers' refrigerators—perfectly adapted to grocery stores of average size. The exterior is of oak, antique finish; the interior is of odorless poplar or spruce, finished with two coats of shellac. All doors are provided with two thicknesses of double strength glass, except the ice door, which is fitted with a beveled plate mirror.

One grocer says:—"I am well pleased with my McCray No. 410. It is a money-saver and trade-getter. I sell just four times as much butter as I did before installing it. Eight hundred pounds of ice is the most I have ever used in eight days, and that was the hottest weather we have had."

Don't get an "Ice Box."

The damp, musty, stagnant air "Ice Box" is a breeding place for germs and disease, and the average refrigerator is merely an elaborate Ice Box.

Proper ventilation and perfect circulation of cold, dry air is only properly obtained in the "Eureka" Refrigerator, which has an exclusive and patented system of air circulation, and this guarantees an absolutely dry refrigerator.

We have been twenty-five years exclusively manufacturing refrigerators, and our present models have all our knowledge and experience worked into them.

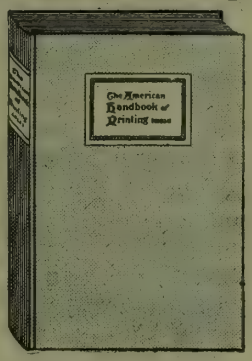
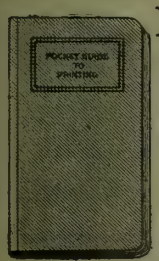
BOOKS ON PRINTING

How To Make Money in the Printing Business



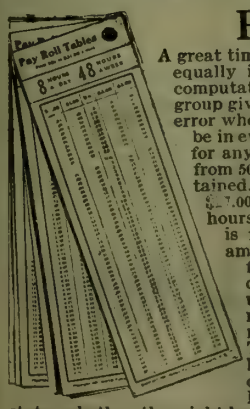
By Paul Nathan

Give value and "charge the price" might be an answer to this question: but there is a very complete and comprehensive answer in Paul Nathan's book of 288 pages, bearing this title, and every progressive printer should own the volume. The book gives full details and information on the highest authority—Experience. It tells how a man made money out of Printing—a thing we all are anxious to do. You need this book; send the order now. Here is a glimpse into the table of its contents: Starting an Office, What Class of Customers to Seek, How to Develop Business, Writing Advertising Matter, Etc., Taking Orders, Advertising, How to Talk to Customers, The Cost of Producing Printing, Estimating, Acquiring Money, Price Cutting, Competitors, Profit and How It Should Be Figured, Buying, Doing Good Printing, The Composing Room, The Press Room, The Business Office, Bookkeeping, Management of Employees, etc. 288 pages. Cloth; gilt stamped. Size, 9 x 5¾". Price, postpaid, $3.00.



American Handbook of Printing

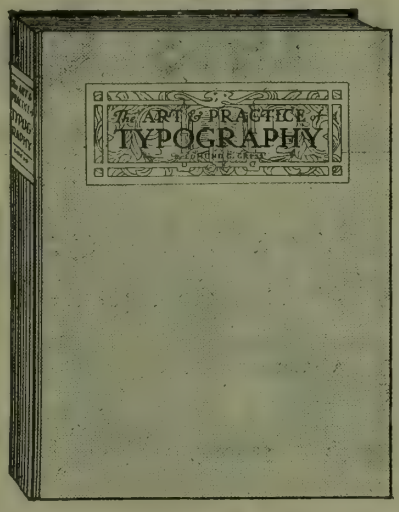
By Edmund G. Gress



The essential information on subjects printorial (and allied) brought to a brief expression that makes them accessible and easy to remember, are herein to be found. You may here find things in a "boiled down" state that permits of covering a wide field well. The color chart supplemental sheet is in itself worth the price of the book. The running chapter heads are: Type Making, Type Faces, Type Composition, Typesetting Machines, Proofreading, Stonework, Paper, Composition Rollers, Printing Inks, Printing Presses, Bookbinding, Stereotyping and Electrotyping, Engraving, Lithography. Newspapers and Magazines, Advertising and Ad-Writing, Printers' Business Methods. The book contains over 300 pages, 25 in color, and 182 illustrations. Size, 7⅛ x 5¼". Price, postpaid, $2.00.

Pocket Guide to Printing

There are a thousand and one things buried in larger books but made available in this handy little volume of vest-pocket size. Compiled for the printer, advertising man, and all having to do with the printing trade. Contains information on Names of Type, How to Estimate Type, Leads to the Pound, Weight of Leads Required for Any Work, Styles of Type Faces, Plates Used by Printers, Newspaper Measurements, To Find Amount of Copy Needed, Proofreaders' Marks, Punctuation, Preparing Copy, Schedule for Checking Forms, Test of Correct Imposition, Register on Folding Machines, Scale of Signatures, Imposition, Cost of Binding, Paper Sizes, Figuring Stock, Covers, To Get 1,000 Pieces, To Find the Equivalent of Paper, Sizes of Cut Cards, Printing Consecutive Numbers, Technical Terms, etc.; cloth; 48 pages. Size, 6⅛ x 3½". Price, postpaid, 50 cents.



Pay Roll Tables

A great time-saver, and additional to this saving is the equally important fact that the accuracy of these computations prevents error. This pay-roll table group gives the cheapest kind of insurance against error where error must never be. The tables should be in every up-to-date office. With them the amount for any number of hours or minutes at any rate, from 50 cents to $51.00 a week can be quickly ascertained. For an example, if an employee, getting $17.00 a week (eight hours a day) works 4 days, 3 hours and 35 minutes, by turning to the tables it is found that the rate per day is $2.83, the amount for three hours is $1.06 and the amount for 35 minutes is 21 cents. The total amount due ($12.59) is then quickly computed. Figure this out in the old way and find how much time you are now losing. Time is money, and by saving time you save money. These tables may be had for either the eight-hour or the nine-hour day. There are eight cards to a set; 32 complete tables in each set. Printed on strong bristol board. In ordering state whether the eight-hour or nine-hour a day set is wanted. Size, 9½ x 3½". Price, 50c. each set; $1.00 for both, postpaid.

Londoners Revel in Speech and Song

Members of Forest City Retail Grocers' Association Celebrate Fourth Annual Banquet—An Harmonious Gathering—Col. A. M. Smith Talks of Defence of Canada—William Turnbull and J. S. McDougall Speak of Mercantile Interests —The Need of Deeper Waterways—The Pocketing of Profits—The Michigan Association—Plan to Beat Mail Order Business.

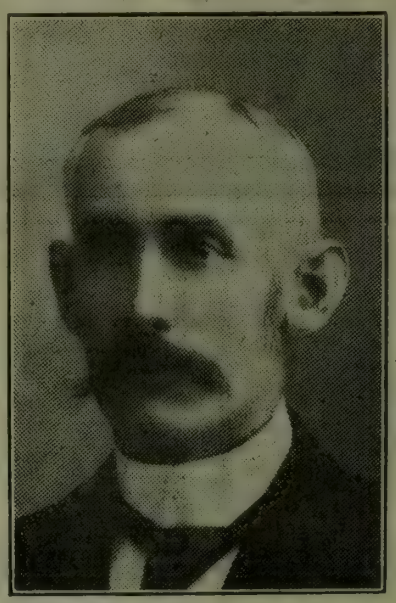
London, Ont., April 27.—Around the festive board at the City Hotel in London, on April 18th, last, there gathered one hundred and fifty retail grocers and their guests to celebrate the fourth annual banquet of the local association.

It was a happy and an auspicious occasion for no discord dwelt amongst them, and the spirit of speech and song held high revel until early in the morning. Not a man there but was made glad by his neighbor's company, and the hearty reception of toasts and responses kept the other inmates of the hotel out of bed and drew them to the entrance doors of the room where the feast was held. It was a good time in London and went far to show what wonders may be accomplished when unity becomes an harmonious thing.

A Working Organization.

In the Forest City this organization has worked wonders for the good of the trade and for the well-being of the grocery clerks. Time was when no dealer in London even imagined it would be possible to close the doors before nine o'clock on week nights; but now clerks and proprietors alike doff their aprons, as the hands on the dial of the timepiece register the hour of 6.30, and some are talking openly of shortening the business day by half an hour more. Price-cutting too, was a bogey that was wont often to play havoc in the stores of this city, but, although one or two of the speakers during the evening found grounds sufficient to charge the assembled feasters with the folly, the so-called evil is in nowise so great as before the spirit of organization took hold of the members. And so great good nature and contentment with things as they are, shone in the faces of those one hundred and fifty retailers gathered under the baton of C. W. Summers, the retiring president, and the searching eyes of sundry wholesalers, manufacturers and travelers.

The banquet was late in starting, many of the members finding it difficult to get down town so soon after the cares of business had been laid aside, but this deficiency was well made up in the lateness which the gathering held together. True, there were some few who departed as the clocks of the city tolled out the hour of midnight but a goodly number held on until the last speech had been made, and the National Anthem sung with pleasing fervor.



Introduced the President.

A pleasant feature of the evening was the installation of Norman McLeod, the president-elect of the association. Mr. Summers, in handing over the toast list to the new head, introduced him as one of the oldest grocers in the city and predicted a successful year for the association under his leadership. Amid applause, Mr. McLeod modestly replied that he was no speechmaker, though never in his life had he so wished for the gift as on this night, but he would try to compensate for the short-coming by hard and increasing work for the good of the organization.

Canada and the Empire.

Col. A. M. Smith, of the local wholesale house of that name, was the first speaker, his response being to the toast of "Canada and the Empire." The Colonel in the past has donated both money and service to the development of the military units af his city and, as may be assumed from the wording of the toast, his address was confined entirely to military matters, British traditions and sentiments, and to the peace movement now occupying a prominent place in the debates of the parliaments of nations.

Dwelling upon the sentimental bonds, which bind the British Empire together, the speaker said that while in the British West Indies recently he had been astonished at the intense loyalty exhibited by all classes. Even the negroes had been infected with it. But Canada's place in the Empire, he said, was not the same as that of the British West Indies. Canada was a nation and the Monarchy was the only bond to hold her in the confederacy of nations. The Empire was not a thing girt about with iron bands, and if Britain became a republic the bond of sentiment—the only true bond—would be lost. The eyes of all the world were upon this country, the speaker continued, and it behooved Canada to look to her defences. It was not well to depend too much upon Great Britain for help, because Canada was a weakling no longer. The history of nations told all too clearly that those peoples that forgot the arts of war in the development of the commercial idea entirely always were easy prey for their stronger brethren. It was a sacred duty of Canadians to bear arms and he sincerely hoped they would not neglect to do so.

NORMAN McLEOD,
The President-Elect Who Wished to be An Orator.

"In the peace movement now going on," said Col. Smith, "only the nations that are strong are mentioned. In the list we find Japan and not China. Probably the next time this things comes up for attention China and not Japan may be the greatest nation. China is preparing. There have been peace movements in the past and I hope there always will be in the future, but only the strong can hope to be considered; only those who are prepared for war can expect to hold attention." The speaker sat down amidst great and prolonged cheering.

Not a Drop of Blood.

The next toast which Mr. Summers proposed was that of "Our Mercantile Interests," to which the names of William Turnbull and J. S. McDougall were coupled. Mr. Turnbull was first to speak.

"This is a large subject and a varied one," said he, "and a great many men view it from a great many standpoints. It all hinges, in my mind on the condition of the times. In illustration of this let me tell you a story concerning one of our estimable retailers, Ed. Ryan. 'Ed.' was recently returned from a trip to the Ould Sod, and, when I met him on the street I inquired how times were in Ireland.

" 'They're not so good; not so good as they once were,' Ed. remarked sadly. 'Why I attended a fair over there just before I came away and there was not a drop of blood spilt until after four o'clock.' "

The face of Mr. Ryan was overspread with blushes, and when the speaker could be heard in the din which followed the quip, he said: "This all goes to show that everything hinges on the condition of things as they are."

For Deeper Waterways.

"But to be serious," proceeded Mr. Turnbull, "the one thing most important to retailers is that of freight rates. The tonnage of the groceries coming to this city exceeds that of any other business and the goods are such that they will not stand a high rate. The lower the freight rates the better it is for ourselves and for the consumer as well. So a very important matter is the lake carrying trade. The Port Stanley Railway which did not loom large in the life of the city of London to-day is also an important factor in that connection. When you consider that absolutely without it, goods would cost 4c a pound more than they do to-day you can get an idea of what it is worth to us.

"It used to be said that the cheapest freight rates in the whole world were those in force on the great lakes. Grain could be carried from Duluth, on Lake Superior to Buffalo, on Lake Erie for 1.8 cents a bushel, while coal was carried back for fifty cents a ton. The most important factor in the transportation affairs of Canada to-day is her chain of waterways. So the most important thing Canada has to see to-day is the deepening of her canals that she may handle all the traffic between the west and the sea ports. These canals, Welland and those on the St. Lawrence should allow of vessels of 25 feet draught passing through in safety. Then the increase in trade would make Canada the greatest country in the world. Look at the increased tonnage passing through Ste. St. Marie to-day," he cried, "and think of what it will be when ten or fifteen millions more people have settled in the west. The present system will not suffice, but with its enlargement, the St. Lawrence will be the busiest river the world has ever seen. I want to call the attention of the grocers to this. Every man has influence. He should use it to bring this about."

What is a Do-do?

J. S. McDougall, who followed, lectured the dealers considerably on their price-cutting proclivities, and also told two good stories. The first one came after he had congratulated the previous speaker on his remarks in connection with the betterment of trade through the improving of the waterways. He could, he said, only add his "me too" to the address. Then he said:

"That reminds me of a story I heard about a certain Irishman and his wife. This son of Erin had always been accustomed to humble fare and humble surroundings, and, when he could, always paid cash on the nail. One day a legacy was left to this couple, which provided a princely income, and they soon decided to move to a better neighborhood. There was a fine corner grocery. Pat's wife, for some time paid cash. One night she came home with a grievance.

" 'Pat,' says she, 'would you belave it, I'm the only wan of all the wimmin that goes to that store to pay cash. They always get their bills and pay wanst a wake. I want to do the same.'

" 'All right, Bridget,' answered Pat, 'pay wanst a wake but be sure you pay.'

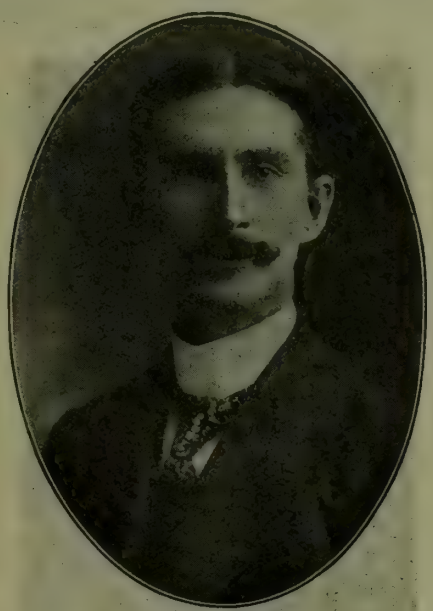
"Things went well for a time until one week the bill came. There had been a lot of company at the house and a quantity of bread had been consumed.

" 'Pat,' says Bridget, with tears of anger in her voice, 'that young snip of a grocery clerk is doing me. He's charged me here with goods I niver ordered.'

" 'How's that,' inquired Pat.

" 'Here it is,' says his aggrieved spouse, pointing to the bill on which charge was entered for three loaves of bread on Tuesday, and on Wednesday "do-do" for a like amount.

" 'I niver ordered any of thim "do-does," ' said she, 'and I don't even know what they are.'



"Pat put on his coat and hat, and with fire in his eye went to the store. After some time he re-entered the house, but sat down without a word. There was a world of disgust in his face.

" 'Did you find out," asked Bridget, timidly, at last.

" 'Shure I found out,' shot back Pat. 'I found out I was a D——n fool, and you "do-do." '

Should Pocket Profits.

"Now, though it grieves me to say it, that is where you dealers fail at times," proceeded the speaker when the laughter had died away. You are always doing "do-do." The association at large grows just the same as does the individual. Some of you keep putting progress away, and so the whole of you are deprived of profits which concerted action would have made possible. Whenever an opportunity arises to allow of you gentlemen making a little more profit than you have done there is always some one to give it away. A short time ago there was an excellent opportunity in sugar. Then somebody commenced cutting and everybody jumped in. You all lost the money instead of putting it into your own pockets though, if what I have heard is true, God knows you need it. No doubt a crowd of customers is attracted by the lowered price. But it is the kind of business that stays for months on the books. My advice to you is: If you have a man among you who cuts prices, let him do so while you can console yourselves as Hawkins was consoled.

Who Said Times in Ireland Were Not so Good as of Yore.

"Hawkins," proceeded Mr. McDougall, "was a particular friend of a certain bishop, and the ecclesiastic had been sitting up nights with him. Then, worn out, the bishop said to his man: 'Harry I'm going to have a sleep; you sit up and if Hawkins gets worse, come for me, so that I may be able to console him before he goes.' So the bishop took himself off to bed. He slept well, it seems, and when he wakened in the morning he hurriedly dressed himself to see how Hawkins fared. On the way thither he met Harry picking his way along the street.

" 'How's Hawkins?' queried the bishop.

" 'Oh; Hawkins, he's dead,' answered Harry.

" 'Man! man! why didn't you call me that I might console him before he died?' asked the cleric in some distress.

" 'I consoled him all right, my Lord,' answered this man.

" 'How did you give the poor chap consolation?' pursued the wondering bishop.

Consoling 'Awkins.

" 'Oh, said Harry, 'I said, just when he was bad, "'Awkins you've been a bad beggar in your day.' He reckoned as how he had been. And then when he was a shade worse, I added: ' 'Awkins you've been a real bad beggar in your day.' 'Awkins fancied he had. Then to still further console the poor fellow, my Lord, I said: ' 'Awkins, do you know where you be agoing? you're going straight to H—l.' 'Awkins allowed as he was. And when he was just agoing, my Lord, I said: 'Well, 'Awkins, it's a blame good job you've got some place to go.'

"Now, that's what to do about this price-cutting business,'. proceeded the speaker, laughing. "Just stop and think as Harry did, when someone starts to lower sugar, that it's a blame good thing that class of the buying public has some place to go. If you lose money in selling the staple so low you have no one to blame but yourselves."

Ald. R. C. Eckert, in the absence of Mayor J. H. A. Beattie followed to respond to the toast "City of London."

"I told his worship when he asked me to speak for him to-night that I never felt at a loss in speaking to retail grocers," commenced Ald. Eckert, 'because I was a retail grocer when cod fish came in sheets, and sugar in great casks. Possibly," he added amid laughter, "I may have forgotten a great deal since then because the grocery trade is always progressive.

To Re-open Old Channels.

"I have followed with interest the remarks of previous speakers in connection with freight rates, and especially those referring to the past history of the Port Stanley Railway. Some few years ago sugar used to come here at a low rate. It came by vessel from Montreal to Port Stanley and up the railway to this city. There used to be a great tonnage. I don't see why the system should not come back again. The trouble seemed to be that the grocer wanted his sugar from Montreal before breakfast. Would it not be a good thing for the retailer when buying, to ask the wholesaler if the staple came in over the Port Stanley Railway? As it stands the road is not a paying investment, but if we can get that tonnage back all will be well."

Ald. Eckert then gave a survey of the progress of the city in recent years.

M. Masinet, one of the oldest of local wholesale men, then gave a delightful, discursive address, to the toast "Past and Future." He alluded to the moral pitfalls digged for him in early years, and pointed out with pleasing humor the need of the formation of a band of Indian chieftains as a distinctive Canadian honor by the King.

Norman McLeod, was at this juncture installed as presiding officer, and assumed charge of the toasts until the close.

Manufacturers Speak.

John I. Hunt and John Stevely, local manufacturers, responded to the toast, "Our Manufacturers."

"The manufacturing situation in London, to my mind is peculiar," said Mr. Hunt. "One man told me a few weeks ago that during the summer he had to run part time for the reason that there was not enough help for him to operate at full strength." The speaker thought an effort should be made to bring to the city manufacturers who could give employment to cheap labor. Electric roads should be encouraged so that young people from the country could come into the city to the factories in the morning and go home again in the evening.

John Stevely said that he knew of no city so favorably situated as London to capture the trade of Western Canada. He would gladly give the hand of welcome to any manufacturer who desired to come to the city and would tell them he knew of no place where he could do better.

A Voice From Michigan.

J. T. Percival, of Port Huron, secretary of Michigan State Association of Retail Grocers, was the next speaker, and his address, dealing with affairs in Michigan, was followed with the closest interest throughout. Now and again, one or other of the members would interrupt in approval of his views.

"When I was invited to come here," began Mr. Percival, "it was to speak to the subject, "How We do Business in Michigan." That was quite a large order. Still, I feel that only good can come from an exchange of views and ideas between this association and ours.

"We have a large State organization, also locals affiliated with the National Association. We have conventions every year, when we get together and learn something about good business, credit and collection systems, and such like being taken up in open assembly. In regard to credit rating we have a system in Michigan whereby if a man leaves a town or forgets to pays, the man who is "stung" informs the secretary, who in turn informs every other member of the association. So that the man cannot obtain further credit until he has settled that first account.

"From what I have found, the real trouble lies in the grocers being afraid of each other. It is a shame. All should help instead of each trying to cut the other's throat. In some towns I go into all are one happy family, while in others one dealer won't speak to another. Some fellows are so terribly independent. They know the whole business. No one can tell them anything, and they will cut prices just whenever it suits them. But price-cutting is a knife that cuts both ways. It reaches him as well as the other fellow.

Should Meet Often.

"Now I believe," proceeded Mr. Percival, "that grocers should meet often—at least as often as bank directors. It helps a lot. Over in Michigan I know of one association who meet every Tuesday afternoon. They get together and talk over all the local troubles and are able to harmoniously unravel any tangle. I would like to see you London men do the same thing. I know of another association in my State where the credit rating system has been perfected to a degree impossible in other centres. Even the undertaker is in it. They have there a list of all the fellows who forget to pay bills and also of those who send out to the catalogue houses. If a circular is sent out by the secretary with "C" printed against the name the dealer knows at once that the man named has been sending money to the mail order houses, beating the whole town. Then when that fellow comes along to get credit, he is turned down like a deadbeat.

"About early closing," continued the speaker, "let me tell you of my own experience. No one in my town thought closing could be accomplished before nine o'clock. We got together, and soon they were committed to close at eight. Then it was seven, and then six. Now you cannot buy a box of matches in Port Huron after 6 o'clock because, as soon as the clock strikes clerks have a race to the door. We all gave open credit there once too. Let me tell you of that. One fellow stuck me for $35 and then left me. I tried to collect, and couldn't so I turned him out. My next neighbor down the street got him. The fellow kept going until he had "stung" the nine of us silent grocers. At a subsequent meeting of the association we compared notes and found we had been beaten for $236. Had I been sensible, I'd have gone over and posted Bob. That's where jealousy spoils things. One fellow tries to do all the business of the place, when he couldn't do it if he had the chance. That's the real benefit of an association. Men get acquainted and see what it is best for them sooner than they otherwise would. Another thing, always treat the traveling man right. He's your friend and can give you many inside pointers. It makes me sick to go into some stores and find the proprietor taking up his time driving out the cat or something so that he will not have to listen to the traveler.

"Thanks, old man," broke in a traveler. "That's about right." "I know it is," returned Mr. Percival.

Co-operative Delivery in Michigan.

Then the speaker turned to the working out of a co-operative delivery system over in a city of about 15,000 population in Michigan. "There are a good many co-operative deliveries in our State, but I want particularly to speak of this one. There is $20,000 invested. When a start was made the delivery outfit of every dealer was appraised. The grocer and the butcher were each classified, and were given stock to that amount. There is a superintendent, a bookkeeper, a barn boss, and also men to take care of the horses. There are three deliveries in the morning and two in the afternoon. These are made on schedule time. The dealers find it costs less than two-thirds of the expenditure that was necessary when each had individual deliveries. There are 18 wagons and 12 routes. Deliveries are made at 7, 9, and 11 in the morning, and 2 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

"Every household has been informed by card as to the hours when goods might be expected. No night work is done. Everything is closed out by six o'clock, and the dealers find this a saving. You couldn't get them to go back to the old system.

"Another thing I want to tell you about is a saving they have been able to make out of waste paper. Every dealer saves his waste in baskets or in barrels, and from these receptacles it is forwarded onto the central delivery. There it is baled and sold, the proceeds going to help bear expense of the system. In one month the returns showed that $126 had been saved in waste paper alone. There are you see many wastes in the grocery business.

"There are two grocery trade papers in Michigan," concluded Mr. Percival. "It is a duty for each dealer to subscribe to one or other of these. You can't learn too much, and there is nothing like a trade paper to show you what the other fellows are doing."

Mr. Moyer's Address.

"The retailer is the salt of the earth," declared M. Moyer, treasurer of the Retail Grocers' Association, in rising to speak to the same toast. "I consider," said he, "that the retailer is even greater than the wholesaler and manufacturer, because he stands between the producer and the consumer. The country is prosperous, yet the retail grocer is not getting his proper share. The only way we can get it, is by organization." The speaker here gave a detailed description of how the Retail Grocers' Association came into being. He also outlined the career of three co-operative stores in Toronto, and urged notice of the effort now being made to secure another co-operative bill from Parliament at Ottawa.

"Now there is no class of people that can do more for the prosperity of the country than the retail merchant," he said. "That's a big statement, but it's true. So is it not time that we consider better trade methods, and get more harmony among the members than exists at the present time? Why do we sit here with folded arms and allow all our young men to leave Ontario farms?" he asked. "Even the schools are being depopulated. There are only two places to go—Toronto and the North-West. Again let me ask why this is? Because these places advertise. Yet I venture to say there's not a single farm of one hundred acres in the West, upon which buildings have been erected, that has not been more expensive than a similar acreage in Ontario. But the people go there because they got going. And that is why business is going to the mail order houses—because it got going.

An Exchange in Shoes.

"I was in a shoe store in a certain town in Ontario the other day when a lady came in with a pair of new shoes.

ADVANCE IN ROLLED OATS.

Giving the strength of the oat market as a reason manufacturers on Tuesday advanced the price of rolled oats by twenty cents a barrel.

As a general rule there is a weaker tendency to this cereal in the spring as the export call for the raw product is not then expected to amount to much. This year there appears to be a rather peculiar condition existing.

In Manitoba and the other Western provinces it seems that the growers have been averse to marketing their oats, believing presumably that the market would go higher as the season advanced. According to millers there are several million bushels in the hands of these men. In addition to that there is a growing demand for oats in Europe, and buyers are seeking the grain to satisfy this class of business.

Combined, all these circumstances make for a stronger market, and it is upon the strength of the oat market that the price of the cereal depends. Generally speaking, rolled oats are dearer this year than last by about fifteen cents a sack. The price will probably not come down until somebody in the west unloads holdings in considerable volume.

INSPECTION OF SCALES.

A grocer of Clinton, Ont., who contends that the inspection of his scale is calculated to protect the public and who accordingly resents the demand upon him of a dollar and a half and upwards every time an inspector looks into his store on inspection bent, wants to know why the fees should not be paid from the public purse, quoting the payment of medical health officers as a precedent.

The comparison seems hardly apt, because it is just possible the inspection of the scale might work a saving for the grocer sometimes. It would look strange if it did not, and the public would be the first to seize upon the fact as another argument, "showing how it is continually done." But that isn't the point.

There are two questions involved in this situation. The first is whether the inspection is useful, or needed; the second, who should pay for it. Regular inspection of scales would be a guarantee to the public. It would lull the suspicions of the housewife, and have a tendency to improve things all round. But such an inspection must be regular, and often. Again, owing to the general honesty of dealers, only once in many times does the inspector find the machines giving wrong weight. So it would appear the inspection is not needed.

As to the payment, there appears to be a great difference of opinian. If an inspection is to be regular it thereby becomes a PUBLIC SERVICE and should be paid for out of public funds. If it is not regular but intermittent and calculated to trip up the merchant, then it is only a Government test. In such a case it would seem that the only logical manner of treating the payment issue would be to have no charge when the scales are right and a penalty when they are found to be wrong.

That would cover the trouble and tend to keep them ALWAYS RIGHT. It would also serve as a guarantee to the public. It would appear to be an equitable arrangement. The Grocer would like to get the views of other dealers on this question, because our Clinton friend is not the only one interested.

THE DISCOUNT EVIL.

At different points in the United States bitter conflicts are being waged between trading stamp companies and retailers who stand up for business conducted on a NON-DISCOUNT BASIS.

In some cases reported the dealers seem to be winning. In the city of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, they appear to have compelled the trading stamp concerns to solicit companies and manufacturing plants generally not touched upon in contests of this kind. But in Cedar Rapids, and, for matter of that, in the whole of Iowa, an effort is being made to have all retailers sign a "pledge" to abstain from giving trading stamps for some definite period, usually a year. At last reports the responses were most liberal.

Canadian dealers should not forget how lately they have escaped from the same evil in this country. They should bear in mind also that all such things, defeated in one way, always seek to reenter the fold in some other guise, so covered that the particular scheme may seem most truly lamb-like and innocent. Be on the watch always, for these propositions are hatching even while sleep has closed the eyes of most honest merchants.

There are some towns in Ontario and other provinces where dealers have been "stung.' by these so-called "business-getters." It is almost safe to predict that these towns will not be worked again.

THE MENACE IN CO-OPERATION.

William Maxwell, of Rothesay, Scotland, President of the International Co-Operative Alliance, who is touring Canada with the object of stimulating interest in co-operation, does not seem to be meeting with any great measure of success.

Already Canada has seen several stores of this class start, do business for a short time and then go out like a sputtering candle, while numerous poor folk, induced by alluring promises to join, mourned the loss of their small savings.

The real trouble with these concerns lies in the fact that the partial Governmental endorsation, contained in an Act of Incorporation imparts an idea of stability, and of prospective profits that is not warranted. It is a lamentable fact that everywhere this half-badge of gentility, and solidity is used as a bait to draw from banks, and hoards the timorous dollars of the honest poor. In such schemes as these there lurks always the possibility to deceive the inexperienced investor. It is a pity.

Freedom to embark in legitimate enterprise can be denied no one, but it is to be hoped that Parliament in its wisdom, will see clearly the advisability of preventing the Co-operative Bill now before the House of Commons, going on the statute books. So long as the retailers of the country hold together, and keep an unsleeping eye turned on Parliament Hill, it is probable the measure will not pass. But it may slip by in an unguarded moment. It is this fact that must be considered in every retail store in Canada.

While addressing a meeting of retailers in Kingston recently, H. A. Harrington, Dominion organizer for the R.M.A., made the statement that those who were in the library competition were breaking the law by using a device which could be construed as a discount or bribe to customers. It is reported that some of the dealers present expressed pleasure at the prospect of having a clear field of competition. Others in the town are credited with having taken the remark of the R.M.A. man less kindly.

Cutting Knots for Correspondents

One Dealer Could Not See How Grocer Arrived at Year's Statement Printed in Previous Issue—Some Doubt Even in the Answer—The Query as to How a Merchant is to Know When He is Obeying Law on Produce and Lines of Foodstuffs.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

March 9, 1911.

Mr. H. Johnson, Jr.
cr. The Canadian Grocer,
143-149 University Ave.,
Toronto.

Dear Sir,—I have been reading with considerable interest your articles which have been appearing from time to time in our trade paper, "The Canadian Grocer," and may say that I have received some very valuable pointers on many of the topics which you have touched on.

There are one or two questions which I would like to ask you in connection with articles appearing in issues of Feb. 17th and March 3rd. In your article of Feb. 17th, you give a copy of a grocer's first year's statement, and I notice that in this statement he arrives at the conclusion that his net profit on year's business is $1,426.70. In looking over the figures I quite see that the profit is 2.81 p.c. plus on sales, but do not see exactly how he arrives at the amount. As it is is his first year in business I presume the difference between his assets and liabilities, allowing for depreciation on fixtures, bad debts, etc., must represent his profit, but as stated do not see how he arrives at the figure.

Expenses Seemed Low.

In your article of March 3rd, I read with interest of the success attending the efforts of our friend from the Old Country, and quite agree with your statement, that he started in right, and made good by sticking right on the job. I am interested, however, in knowing in just what part of the Dominion he is doing business, as his percentage of expense on gross sales seems particularly low to grocers doing business in this Western Country. Possibly he is working under more favorable conditions than we are, as our percentage of expense in —— runs nearer 12½ p.c. than 9½ p.c.

Trusting you will find time to answer my communication when convenient, believe me,

Yours sincerely,
W. A. E.

One Arrangement.

I have tried to get my former correspondent to write an elucidation of his statement along the lines suggested by W. A. E., but he does not reply, so I have had to do some "digging" myself. Here is the way it works out as I see it:

Gross sales	$50,760.20
Less cost of goods	35,934.00
Gross profit	14,826.21
Less net expense	9,129.51
Net profit	5,696.70
Portion represented by stock on hand	4,270.00
Leaving amount for dividends	1,426.70

Another Compilation.

But, on the other hand, here is something which might modify his conclusions. Suppose we look at it this way:

Assets are	$9,270.10
Less liabilities, bills pay., capital stock	7,843.40
Which leaves, as above	1,426.70
Which tangible assets have been scaled for F. & F. and bills received	413.55
Apparently leaving available for dividends only	1,013.15

I am not clear on this point, though I have thought over it a good deal. Question is: If the total tangible surplus is $1,426.70, and we cut into it to the extent of $413.55, can we by any process of correct figuring have the entire amount of $1,426.70 on hand for dividends?

The "friend from the Old Country" is located in New Jersey.

Just Hated to Ask.

Here is a merchant whose troubles are those of legal pure foods:

Hornell, N.Y., March 9, 1911.

Gentlemen,—I receive so much knowledge from you that I hate to ask for special information. But I would like to know about farm made butter, vinegar, maple syrup and maple sugar. How are we to know when we obey the law? We want to obey the law to the letter, but cannot tell whether butter contains 16 p. c. moisture, or vinegar 40 p.c. acid, or maple sugar all maple, rice glazed, or not. We are told to stamp oleo, process butter, cottosuet, compound, cottolene, vegetole, and soon to have a stamp for all teas, unless natural. Kindly advise.

Respectfully,
PURE FOOD COMPANY.

The General Risk.

You cannot tell about farm produce and must simply take the risk unless the seller will give you a written guaranty, in which case you are relieved of responsibility and the trouble is up to him. Butter which is well "worked" is likely to come within the law and pure cider vinegar, made from apple juice only, should always be safe for 4 p.c.—not 40 p.c.—acetic acid. But your farmer may not know about these tests and may then decline to give you a guaranty. In the case of maples, however, he can know, and his refusal to give the guaranty is prima facie evidence that you had better let his stuff alone. As to rice, that is bought from people who are in position to give and from whom you are in position unequivocally to demand a guaranty, and you should get it every time.

Fail Through Ignorance.

Gentlemen,—I was much interested in your sample pages relating to store expenses. I have been in the retail grocery business over twenty-five years and during that time have seen the rise and fall of a number of so-called grocerymen, and my honest opinion is that more grocerymen fail from not knowing how to figure percentage than from any other cause. I am sending you my way of figuring expense. If you care to publish it, you have my consent; but would rather you would not mention my name or place of business.

Yours truly, G. O. W.

His Method.

Capital stock		$3,000.00
Store rent, per month	$30.00	$360.00
1 clerk, per month	40.00	480.00
Myself, per month	75.00	900.00
Fuel, per month	2.50	30.00
Light, per month	3.00	36.00
Insurance, per month	3.00	36.00
Taxes, per month	3.00	36.00
Telephones, per month	2.50	30.00
Advertising, per month	2.50	30.00
Delivery horse and wagon, per year		50.00
Incidentals, per year		50.00
Int. in Investment, 6 p.c.		180.00
Total expense		$2,578.00

Luck on Horse-Keeping.

Yearly sales, $18,000.

20 p.c. gross profit, 1-6th of sales	$3,000.00
Expense	2,578.00
Net profit	$422.00

$2,578 divided by 18,000 equals 2 1-3 per cent. expense.

$422 divided by 18,000 equals 2 1-3 per cent. net profit.

Which I pass upon as a very conservative statement, which probably fairly reflects local conditions of competition, etc., but it looks like he is very lucky in his horse keeping expense. It costs me as much every sixty days to keep one horse.

GROCERS IN POLITICS.

John W. Vanwart Defeated for the Council in St. John.

St. John, N.B., April 27.—John W. Vanwart, proprietor of Vanwart Bros., grocers and meat dealers, who has been in the city council for the past six years, was defeated last week, in the annual elections, by about 400 votes. Ald. H. G. Smith, the west side grocer, was returned with a comfortable majority. George W. Colwell and Thomas J. Dean, two retail grocers who sought to break into civic politics, were unsuccessful in downing their opponents.

This will be the last year for the present aldermanic system as the people voted by a majority of 2,246 in favor of government by an elective commission composed of a mayor and four commissioners instead of the present council, consisting of a mayor and seventeen aldermen. The new regime begins next year.

TO FORM RETAIL ASSOCIATION.

A committee has been formed in Medicine Hat, Alta., to take preliminary steps in the organization of a Retail Merchants' Association. One of the first questions which will be dealt with is an early closing by-law.

Dishonest Agent Victimizes Grocers

Man Who Represented Himself as Agent for Manufacturer for House Cleaning Product Plays Sad Havoc in Business of Chatham Dealers—The Forged Orders and Flood of Goods—Manufacturer Appears Guiltless.

Chatham, Ont., April 27.—A number of grocers in this city and vicinity are the victims of what appears to have been rather unscrupulous methods of securing orders in connection with an advertising campaign. Apparently, the manufacturers and wholesalers have been also victimized in the matter.

About four weeks ago an agent made his appearance in the city and conducted a house to house canvass, representing that he was acting on behalf of the manufacturers or wholesalers of a certain product designed for sweeping and housecleaning purposes. The agent stated that he was representing the firm which manufactured the goods.

The following was what actually occurred at one house where he called. When the man had introduced himself and his goods the lady of the house declared that she didn't want to buy any.

The Interview.

"But we're not really taking orders," explained the man. "We're just going around, representing the firm and advertising the goods, to give the grocers an idea of how much to put in stock."

The lady still protested that she didn't want any.

"Of course, this doesn't cost you anything," the man assured her. "I am not taking orders."

He then asked if she had ever used the stuff. She said she had not, but that a neighbor had, and from what she could learn it was very good. Some time she might use it herself, but didn't intend to order except through her grocer.

"I am not taking orders," persisted the agent.

He then produced a book, similar to the order-book usually handled by canvassers, with a carbon sheet for duplicating. He asked where the woman dealt, and her name; and secured these, also the street number. He then handed the book to the woman to sign.

She Reads the Paper.

"I suppose since I am to sign this, I might as well read it and see what it is," she commented; and read the printed blank which had been filled in by the agent, and which, besides the information given, contained these words: "This is an order for a can of—— for which I agree to pay 35 cents upon delivery."

"That is an order," declared the woman. "I don't want the stuff now. I may order later; but if so, I'll order through my grocer."

The man explained that the goods would be sent to the grocer, and delivered to her at any time she liked; and she didn't have to pay unless they were delivered. However, the woman ended by telling him flatly that she didn't intend to order. When she wanted the stuff she would go to the grocer.

The Second Act.

This was Act 1 of the drama. Act 2 was pulled off toward the close of an April afternoon, some three weeks later. The scene was the selfsame kitchen. There came a violent rap at the door. The latter being opened, the grocery boy handed in a can of ——.

"Here's your ——, Mrs. ——," he cried.

"But I didn't order any," protested the woman.

Thereupon the boy showed her the duplicate order blank, filled in with her name, the grocer's name, the street address, countersigned by the agent, presumbly in his own handwriting, and with the woman's name ostensibly signed in the blank left for her signature. The woman's "signature" was written in a femine hand, quite different from the agent's; though it was not, of course, the woman's actual handwriting, but a clumsy forgery.

The Goods Refused.

The man of the house happened to be handy, and he promptly told the boy to take the stuff away, that they didn't want it in a gift, and that somebody had been guilty of forgery. The boy took the goods back to the grocer.

Interviewed later, the same grocer stated that this was not the only case. About half the orders he had been handed (taken ostensibly by the agent or agents) had produced similar complaints. In some cases the people had never signed at all; in others they had signed upon the understanding that the goods were not going to cost them anything.

Others Have Like Experience.

Other grocers have had a like experperience. One man ordered a couple of cases of the goods on the strength of these advance orders, only to find that a large percentage of the orders had never been actually given. Of course the grocer never knew there was anything wrong till he or his man went to deliver the goods. Then the cans of —— came tumbling back on him in veritable showers. The grocer could do nothing. Where the customer declared he had never signed, it was out of the question, on grounds of policy alone, to dispute his statement. Where the signature had been actually given, but under the impression that there was no expense involved, to force the goods upon the customer would be equally impolitic. The grocer, in short, found himself loaded with twice as much of the stuff as there was any demand for. In most cases orders had been given by the grocer in considerable excess of the advance orders ostensibly secured by the agent, so that when approximately half of the latter vanished into thin air, the grocer felt him self pretty badly "stung."

Made Sales Difficult.

But this didn't end the grocer's predicament. The goods were excellent; the stuff should, under ordinary circumstances have been easily salable; but the peculiar methods referred to speedily became a matter of common talk. Hence the grocer who undertook to sell these goods to ordinary customers was engaging in very uphill work; and to sell to such as felt an attempt had been made to swindle them was practically impossible.

That the bad advertising given the product by the methods of the agents was injurious to the product itself is the best evidence that the manufacturers were guiltless of any complicity.

Shy Second Time.

This seems to have been by no means the only case of the kind, however. About the time the cans of —— came tumbling in, another agent made a house to house canvass for a flavoring extract—again, from all accounts, a very good product. The first mentioned grocer, however, having been bitten in the first instance, proved shy in the second. The agent for the flavoring extract, who appears to have made fewer misrepresentations in the course of the canvass, brought him one day fifteen orders for the product at 50 cents a bottle. He glanced through the orders, and as he did so, one woman whose name he noticed came into the store. His previous experience was still fresh in his memory. Quietly calling the customer to one side, he showed her the order.

"Did you sign this?" he asked.

"I most certainly did not," she declared.

The grocer had already ordered two dozen of the product on the strength of the advertising campaign, but he immediately cancelled half the order, taking his chances on disposing of the other half.

TORONTO BRANCH AND R. M. A.

Toronto, April 27.—A peculiar situation developed at the last meeting of the Toronto branch of the R.M.A., on Monday night, when President R. W. Dockeray, First Vice-President Harry Ellis, Second Vice-President George H. Cooper, Secretary George E. Gibbard, and Treasurer F. C. Higgins, the entire executive of the branch, tendered their resignations to the meeting on the ground of inability to work in harmony with other sections of the association.

Some time ago these officers, who comprise the executive of the branch, forwarded to the Dominion board a request that changes be made in the constitution to allow the local branch a greater measure of autonomy. This was done because of the discovery that the branch had little or no authority in working out its own affairs. They wanted an amendment to allow of any branch setting its own yearly fees, while sending on a stated per capita tax to the Dominion body. They also desired to exclude all past officers from places on executive committees, and have on these bodies men who were actually holding office.

These things the Dominion board, in their deliberations on Easter Monday in Montreal, did not deem to be in the best interests of the association as a whole, and so the required changes were not made. The local executive, after stating their case, placed their resignations before the meeting. The membership, however, after listening to all the explanations, voiced its disapproval of this procedure, and on a vote being taken the meeting divided 25 to 24 in favor of the officers staying on. They were averse to doing this, but finally, on a motion by Ald. Yoemans, it was decided that they hold a meeting themselves some time during this week, and submit to a meeting of the branch on Monday night next a report, setting forth just what they consider should be done for the best interests of the retail dealers in Toronto.

There was some talk of secession, but several members of the executive spoke against this, pointing out that the only hope of the dealers of the country lay in unity from coast to coast.

INTERESTING NEWS FROM THE AMBITIOUS CITY

Synopsis of the Principal Topics of Conversation in Hamilton Grocerdom—The Annual Picnic—The Motor Truck for Delivery Purposes—A New Suggestion — The Late Arrival of Maple Syrup—Mr. Maxwell to Speak at Canadian Club Banquet.

Hamilton, April 27.—Hamilton grocers have their committees appointed to arrange details for their annual picnic, but as yet have not decided where it will be held. Niagara Falls and Grimsby Beach seem to be the most popular points mentioned. The action of the railways in raising the rates came unexpectedly, and this may make a difference in route selection.

Motor Deliveries.

Motor truck or horse for delivery purposes is becoming quite a subject for discussion among the trade. All realize that in the near future the horseless wagon will be a necessity. It has been suggested that ten or fifteen grocers should combine and give a manufacturer an order that would enable him to make a considerable reduction in price.

Eastern maple syrup is coming in now, this being the latest delivery in years, with orders only partially filled. It is proving an unprofitable business for the grocer, as any warm day it may be lost by fermentation.

Canadian Club Feature.

The Canadian Club feature Mr. Maxwell, the promoter of co-operative societies, as a drawing card for a banquet. It is to be wondered if they knew the nature of the business he is promoting before they heard him, as most of the members are merchants or manufacturers that stand to lose more than any other people by the introduction of co-operative concerns in Canada.

Always Figure Profits on the Selling Price

Here is a letter arising out of an article which recently appeared in "Canadian Grocer," outlining the views on profit figuring of C. E. Jamieson, of St. Catharines.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—I was much interested in the article "Profit Figured on Capital Employed," which appeared in a recent number, and though I am not good explaining on paper, I should like to ask one or two questions on this subject. Let me give an example why we should figure profit on selling price.

Supposing we figure on cost and we purchase at 80 cents to sell for $1 and call that 25 per cent. Now you tell your clerks that you are making 25 per cent. and one of your neighbors comes and wants to be obliged and the clerk is told to let him have it at cost. First thing he would take off 25 per cent., which will not give you the price you paid; which on the other hand had you told him 20 p.c., the "correct" percentage, he would have at least got you your cost.

Another example: "A" commission merchant; "B" merchant:

A sells $10 of goods 25 per cent. commission, $2.50 returned to shipper, $7.50; B sells $10 worth of goods, makes $2.50 returns to wholesale, $7.50.

Thus you see, two men sell $10 and both at end of day have $10 in the till. Both make $2.50, both return to creditor $7.50. Why should that be 25 per cent. on $10, and 33 1-3 per cent. on the other? I claim that the easiest and safest way must be the right and best, in spite of what school books say. I for one would not go to the schoolmaster for business advice. I think C. E. Jamieson must have taught school till quite late in life before taking up business.

Still another example: Suppose a biscuit manufacturer invoiced his biscuits at selling price and allowed us 20 per cent., we would send back to them 20 cents out of every dollar's worth sold. Should I call that 20 per cent. or 25 per cent. profit? As I am too busy to take private lessons, I will still continue to figure the right way.

PICTON AND FREIGHT RATES.

Picton, Ont., April 27.—For some time past local retailers have been urging that some action be taken to adjust freight rates, which appear, on the face of things, to be of a nature discriminatory against dealers in this town.

The matter came to a head last week, when the Board of Trade took it into consideration at its regular meeting.

There was some discussion and as a result a resolution was passed setting forth the views of the body with regard to the alleged discriminations. A copy of the resolution was ordered to be sent to the parties concerned.

Retailers are hopeful this action will have the effect desired. If it does not, some of the local men are disposed to have the matter brought to the attention of the member of Parliament for the constituency. If necessary, they would carry it even further, they say.

LONDONERS REVEL IN SPEECH AND SONG.

'I bought these in a mail order house by catalogue,' she told the dealer. 'They don't fit and I want to exchange them. I'll pay you the difference, because of course you cannot afford to sell as cheaply as the big places can. The dealer looked at the boots, and then brought down a pair of the same size and brand from his shelves. They were fifty cents cheaper. The woman was astounded, and could hardly believe her eyes. She wouldn's have either only the marks on the shoes had undoubtedly been there before she entered the place. Still they go to the catalogue houses to buy goods, just because they got going.

"It's a common thing to see dealers exchanging goods bought from these big establishments. They do it every day.

"Now what I say is that we must go further than simple organization of our own and must organize with the customer. The dealer has got to start a campaign to tell the farmer what to do. This movement must come from all the people in the country. The consumer must understand the retailer. Find out why these people send money away to mail order houses. They cannot really serve the people, except in small part. But find out why it is done. Make the farmer see he is losing more if the country stores close than he can possibly gain from the other end."

Hold Public Meetings.

"Public meetings could be held with speakers from outside points to address them, so that personal bias would not enter in. The situation could be explained in full, and those in the audience could be asked to take their part in the movement. You could appoint joint committees of merchants, mechanics and farmer and work out some systematic plan for the good of the many. There's been a little too much secrecy in this business. Because of this tendency on the part of the dealer to keep things hidden the consumer has come to think he is being "done" all the time. Don't let it get any worse."

The toast to "Our Trade Journal," was responded to by W. J. Whiteside, editor of The Canadian Grocer.

C. W. McGuire spoke a few words for the travelers, and the meeting closed with "God Save the King."

Latest Review of Grocery Markets

Dried Fruits Continue Firm—Stocks of Prunes and Evaporated Apples Especially Scarce—Raisins Another Line Singled Out—Sugar Considered Quite Strong Though Trade is not Brisk—Montreal Reports Higher Market for Tarragona Almonds and New Crop Brazils.

POINTERS—

Tarragona Almonds—Higher.
New Brazils—Received; higher.
Seeded Raisins—Advance noted.

Montreal, Apr. 27th.—The reports from the wholesale houses indicate healthy conditions in the grocery market. Orders are coming in freely, payments are quite satisfactory, conditions in regard to most of the articles are favorable and a prosperous summer seems to be looming up. During the past week the market has been rather uneventful as to prices but the conditions of trade remain bright.

This week practically marks the opening of navigation which with consequent lower freight rates for which the trade has to a certain extent been waiting should give business a new impetus. Flour is somewhat stronger and rolled oats are firming up. New Brazil nuts are on the market, sugar at the recent advance is firm and in good demand.

Canned goods are in practically the same position they occupied a week ago. The demand continues good, especially in tomatoes. This is the time of the year when home stocks are beginning to run low and the grocer is called upon for supplies.

In dried fruits seeded raisins show a slight advance and the whole market is strong. One firm stated that 100 to 110 prunes sold in a wholesale way at 9 cents recently. The smaller varieties are in limited supply and are bringing a good price to those who have them to offer.

The arrival of new strawberries in increased quantities and at a lower price should be of interest to the grocers who handle new fruits, this pointing to the fact that the big season is rapidly approaching.

Sugar.—At the recent advance sugar is firm with a fair enquiry. There are reasons why the demand is still only fairly brisk, the fact that many of the retail trade not having disposed of the heavy stocks they secured some time ago, the awaiting for the opening of navigation, and the heavy character of the roads coming with the breaking up of winter being the foremost. There is a fair business passing, however, and the market is considered strong.

Syrups and Molasses.—Molasses at present are rather quiet but there is interest in the fact that the first arrival of the new crop is reported for next week by steamer. The opening price is that which has been reported for futures. The demand is fair at present but with the opening of navigation and the arrival of new stocks there should be renewed activity. Syrups are moving out well, continuing the business that has been experienced of late.

Dried Fruits.—A slight advance in the price of seedless raisins is reported owing to a scarcity of the old stocks and reports in regard to futures. Evaporated apples and peaches are becoming scarcer every week and prices seem to be naturally seeking a higher level. The market in practically every instance is firm and will likely remain so for some time to come. Some of the houses are in a better position in regard to dried fruit. One will report apricots still in fair supply but evaporated apples done, while with another the condition will likely be the reverse.

Nuts.—New Brazils are practically on the market now. Local houses report them arrived or on the way and the price rather stiff. There is not a great deal of interest in nuts at the present time. A steady demand is noted but otherwise there is nothing new to report. The market is firm. Tarragona almonds are reported very scarce and some of the jobbers are quoting higher prices.

Rice and Tapioca.—There is a fair enquiry for rice. Jobbers report that Carolina rice shows a slight reduction this week. The reason advanced is to the effect that the area of rice cultivation in the southern part of the United States has been greatly increased and with the source of supply larger the amount of rice to offer undoubtedly becomes greater. But at the same time it is admitted that for American rice the demand has always been about equal to the supply. However, the report as given is the statement of one of the local houses on the conditions of the market as they find it. For other varieties of rice the demand is steady and tapioca is also going out well before what is apparently the beginning of a summer demand.

CANNED GOODS

TORONTO.—Canned vegetables, noticeably tomatoes, are enjoying a fair trade, retailers who have run short replenishing their stocks. Canned peas, as can be expected with the high price ruling, are quiet. One dealer referred to canned fruits as growing decidedly small, canners' stocks of a number of lines such as pears and strawberries being about done. This wholesaler said he believed that this year would witness the biggest clean up in stocks of all kinds of canned goods that has been known in years. With stocks now growing into small compass and with a couple of months of good trade yet, when the new stocks arrive on the market, they will be badly needed. Canned apples have been moving out quite well of late at $3.50 to $3.60 for gallons.

MONTREAL.—It is now apparent that stocks of canned goods will be pretty well cleaned out by the time the new pack is ready for the market and this condition is generally regarded by the trade as desirable. Some state that they will likely be short of peas before relief arrives, but that largely depends upon how the demand endures. Tomatoes are going out freely, the price being seldom below $1.40, dealers reporting a good enquiry. Gallon apples are firm and few. Already there is interest manifested in the coming crops and while it is stated that prices have been quoted the inclination seems to be to "sit tight" for a while longer unless, of course, the offer appears particularly attractive. It will be practically two months yet before the earlier crop prices will be quoted or will permit an estimate.

POINTERS—

Tapioca—Firm.

Raisins—Firmer.

Rolled Oats—Advanced 20c. barrel.

Lard—Easier.

Toronto, April 27.—While trade this week is not particularly brisk, prospects for future trade are bright and wholesalers are not complaining. The market has been rather uneventful this week as far as price changes are concerned, an advance of 20 cents a barrel in rolled oats being the most particular feature. The primary market in tapioca is stronger while raisins was singled out from the dried fruit list by some wholesalers as an article exhibiting strength.

The planting of rubber came in for considerable blame for the rise in values during the past year of several lines of groceries. The first item mentioned was tea, the market having been strengthened owing to the large acreage of tea damaged by the inter-planting of the rubber trees. Another dealer attributed the rise in canned pineapple to the same cause, its production having been abandoned for the more profitable rubber trees. Another article for the rise of which it is held responsible is tapioca. A recent report from a tapioca dealer says: "The news we have from the East is that the production of tapioca is still being curtailed, owing to the planting of rubber, and if this sort of thing continues it is quite probable that tapioca in a few years will be a very scarce article. We are also advised that there is damage to the crops this year, so that prices in the primary market are firm."

The sugar market is quite firm at the recent advance. Dealers evidently have not disposed of the stocks purchased some time ago and for this reason trade is not large.

On June 1, the price of puffed rice, it is said, will be advanced 65 cents a case. The present price is $3.60, while the price after June 1 has been set at $4.25 a case.

Sugar.—Following the advance of last week, the sugar market has ruled firm and at the present time is considered strong, owing to the prospects for a materially shorter crop in Cuba than last year. The Cuban planter is helped by the fact that he has no competition from Europe, which rules 30 points higher than Cuban. Refiners are holding off in purchases, being well supplied for current needs, but their stocks are only about one-half as large as last year and will need replenishment from time to time. Local trade is not brisk but normal in volume for this month.

Syrups and Molasses.—The corn syrup trade seems to continue satisfactory in volume. New maple syrup is going out at prices ranging around $1.15 per gallon, but the amount on the market is not large. While the trade in molasses is inclined to quietness, the market, in sympathy with sugar, is firm.

Dried Fruits.—"You won't find any wholesalers pushing prunes because stocks in general are down to a decidedly low basis. I don't think you could get over 100 boxes on the street," said one wholesaler, while all agreed that stocks were small. For this reason even at the present high quotations, prunes are firm. Valencia raisins which some dealers reported are moving better of late is another item that shows some strength. "If purchased at the present time," said one dealer, "I would have to pay as high a figure anyway as I am selling at now." Peaches and apricots under pressure of general scarcity of dried fruits are decidedly steady and for that matter the same thing can be said of the dried fruit list in general.

Frost in the California fruit districts has damaged crops to quite an extent. Included in the fruits damaged are prunes, raisins, peaches and apricots. Apricots were particularly hard hit but it is asserted by some that it will probably be another week before an accurate conclusion in regard to how much injury was done can be arrived at.

Tea.—The local tea situation shows no particular change, the same steadiness in regard to prices continuing, with dealers reporting a fairly satisfactory movement.

Coffee.—The local situation in coffee shows but little change. Willets & Gray's Journal says of coffee, "The prospects of the coming crop are such as to portend the same outcome in the markets as started with the current crops. The trees are not there in condition for large crops, and large crops must be dismissed from calculations. The growing 1911-1912 crop has been pictured as high as 11 to 12 millions in Santos, 3 to 4 millions in Rio. The very latest estimates from the most reliable sources show a considerable reduction from these outside figures. It is said that a careful survey of the plantations is being made in order that a closer line can be drawn on the probable outturn. Such will be made public just as soon as completed but already it is supposed the estimates will not exceed much, if any, the yield of the current season. The coffee world appears to resent such ideas, but the truth is coming out that the next crops are small, and when thoroughly verified the markets must respond."

Evaporated apples	0 14½	0 15

Sardines.—A large importer of sardines has recently received a report from Europe showing that the imported article is likely to rule higher. This is due to the higher price of olive oil in which they are packed and also to the prospects of the coming sardine fishing season which opens in July, and which are none too favorable. This importer said that he would not be surprised to see an advance of 50 or 75 cents per case which means ½ to ¾ cents a tin and which may not seem very large to the small dealers but is to the big handler of this article.

Another dealer in speaking in regard to sardines said, "The high price of olive oil this year may lead unscrupulous manufacturers to substitute a great deal of cottonseed oil in packing their sardines and dealers will have to be more than ever on the lookout for sardines packed in the inferior oil. If he wants to be assured of the best, the dealer should receive a guarantee that they are packed in pure olive oil."

"There is another side to the packing of sardines," said another dealer, "The packer who uses only pure olive oil may in some cases on account of its high price use an insufficient quantity and the sardines would not be properly preserved, but when cottonseed oil is mixed, more can be used and the sardines will be well preserved, although the oil may be inferior. However, the reputable dealer will attempt to keep his product at the former standard."

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advanced.
Dried Fruit.—Scarce.
Syrup.—Higher tendency.
Coffee.—Stronger after decline.

Winnipeg, April 27.—Trade in all lines of groceries have swung back during the week into their natural grooves. The ideal weather of the last week has enabled farmers to start seeding, and as prospects are better for a good crop than they were two weeks ago, the optimistic feeling is having an encouraging effect on the volume of trade being transacted. Country roads are nearly all opened up, and in another week supplies will be able to be freighted out to the more distant points of the country.

Spring housecleaning is now in active operation throughout the entire west and consequently there is still an active call for all lines necessary in this operation.

Many fluctuations have taken place during the week and new prices will be noted in some instances. Sugar has again been on the advance and is now quoted 5 cents a pound higher. Syrup is also showing tendency to advance owing to the strength on the corn market in the south. An advance is looked for in all products such as starch, glucose, syrup and etc.

The dried fruit market is also a source of speculation. Four cars of prunes are all that is in sight to supply the American and Canadian market till the new crop comes in. The raisin crop in California has been seriously damaged by frost and as a result considerable strength is noticed on the open market. Coffee declined but has strengthened again.

Sugar.—An advance of 5 cents per cwt. has taken place on the local sugar market owing to the continued strength of the market to the south. The market is firm and in spite of the large stocks held here some wholesalers prediet a further advance.

Dried Fruits.—The highest market that has prevailed for many years is now in existence for dried fruits. In almost all lines there is a decidedly limited supply, and as for prunes it is said that only four cars are available to supply the American and Canadian market till the new crop arrives in the fall. It is reported that during the week a frost damaged considerably the new raisin crop in California.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N. B., Apr. 26.—The markets have been very uninteresting during the last week. Plate beef is off a little and is now quoted at $19.75 to $20.00. Lard is also easier at 12 to 12½ for pure and 11¼ to 11½ for compound.

Cornmeal in bags is quoted at $1.30 to $1.35, and provincial oats are worth 42 to 44 cents per bushel.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, N.S., April 27.—Wholesale grocers report business brisk and continually improving. The fitting out of the fishing vessels which take large quantities of supplies and the opening up of the ports along the coast have tended to improve things

Potatoes are soaring and it now looks as if they will reach one dollar per bushel before the new stock arrives, and perhaps they may go still higher. They are now quoted at $2.75 per barrel, and stocks are reported light all around.

Butter is only in fair supply, little new stock reaching the market, and the winter supply is being rapidly consumed.

Flour and feeds are steady with the probability of an advance present.

Pork products are easier. Another steamer with a full cargo of sugar arrived here during the week. So far shipments of molasses are coming along slowly, but several vessels are expected within a few weeks.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

To all Scotch Canadians the name of Macfarlane, Lang & Co. will be familiar, particularly in connection with "Rich Tea" Biscuits and "Granola Digestive" Biscuits, two articles of diet which are to be found in nearly every home in the Old Country. The business of Macfarlane, Lang & Co. was founded as far back as the year 1817 by James Lang, grand-uncle of the present directors of the company. It has thus been carried on uninterruptedly for practically a century, and is now controlled by members of the third and fourth generations of the original family. The foundation of the business was the making of bread, and the importance of making biscuits likewise a real element in the food of the people as distinct from what are known as luxuries has always been kept steadily in view, but Macfarlane, Lang & Co. have also originated and popularized many distinctive classes of fancy biscuits, and they excel specially in the production of the various form of cream sandwich and fruit sandwich kinds, also chocolate-coated biscuits, and it is almost unnecessary to add, Scotch shortbread and oat cakes. The firm was awarded a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1889, and has been honored by many royal appointments, including those to their late Majesties, Queen Victoria and King Edward, His Majesty King George V., H. I. M. the Emperor of Russia, and Their Majesties the King of Greece, the King and Queen of Spain, and the late King of the Belgians. Macfarlane, Lang & Co. have just completed thorough arrangements for the development of the Canadian trade, and the productions of the firm being all of the highest class, they should meet with a welcome reception throughout the Dominion.

The grocers of Canada will be pleased to hear that the IXL Spice and Coffee Co., London, Ontario, who started in business about two years ago, importing and manufacturing spices, coffees, extracts, mustards, etc., etc., have added to their now extensive line the making of jelly powders. Choice materials, finest fruit flavors and the experience of years in the making of this article, has enabled them to produce one of the finest jelly powders on the market to-day. In all their goods they adhere strictly to their motto — "Quality," guaranteeing all goods put up under the Sweetheart label, to be absolutely pure.

Since the Dow Milling Company fire at Pilot Mound, Man., it has been made known that the company intend to erect a new plant for the manufacture of cereals and oat meal in Winnipeg, and the capacity will be increased from 250 barrels per day to 500 barrels per day. Nicholson & Bain are directly interested in the Dow Milling Co., and Mr. Bain stated this week that it was the intention of the company to proceed with the plant at once.

An entirely voluntary increase in wages has been granted to the broom tyers in the broom manufacturing department of the Boeckh Bros. Company Ltd. of Toronto. For some years past the prices paid for tying brooms was regulated largely by prison competition, which has now happily been done away with, and the company has, after careful consideration decided to increase the wages of their workmen. In doing so, it has however been stipulated that every broom must be absolutely perfect, as otherwise it will be rejected by the firm's inspectors, thereby insuring to the consumer an article that will give the best of satisfaction. The same rule has been in effect in the brush department of this company for some time, and has proved entirely satisfactory to all concerned.

What the Grocer Can Do in Month of May

Some Suggestions Thrown Out For Benefit of Dealer That He May Not Fail to Take Advantage of the Season—Selling Cereals, Their Display and Introduction—The Pushing of Vegetables and Fruits—Possibilities of Inducing Trade in Country Produce—Seeds.

By J. W. Bryans.

May should be a busy month for the live merchant. But he must be willing to put forth the necessary efforts to secure his share of the trade.

One thing that he should remember is that the house cleaning season is not yet over. While most housewives are anxious to start in early on the regular spring clean up, still there are a good many who postpone this semi-annual duty until the weather can be depended on to continue favorable for the time necessary for the work. It therefore behooves the merchant to keep a sharp lookout on his stocks of house cleaning supplies, that they may not run short and he should not as yet give up his selling attention to these lines.

Selling Cereals.

As the spring opens up and the weather gets warmer, there is a noticeable increase in the sale of cereals and breakfast foods, and the merchant should be after his share of this trade. In this as in most lines of groceries, proper display and personal salesmanship are the important factors in moving out these lines. In the display a mere pile of the article will receive in most cases only passing attention. If the packages are built into some unusual design, the attention of passersby is attracted first to the design of the display and then to the goods themselves. In showing package cerelas or breakfast foods if they are at all new and the people likely to be in ignorance as to what they are like, it is well to have a package emptied into a dish, so that the customer will have an idea of what it is is like.

Fruits and Vegetables.

Attention to fruits and vegetables during May can be made profitable. Oranges are of good quality and can be made good sellers, the weather is now quite favorable for bananas, and pineapples will be cheaper as the month advances. Green goods can be handled perhaps better at this season than at any other. There is no danger of frost and an absence of the heat which makes their handling difficult in the real summer time. Both fruit and green goods are lines which are bought by customers at the store mostly and if you get them coming for them, it will be helpful to other lines in your business.

Country Produce.

Such lines as eggs, butter, cheese and hams should be given some attention during this month also. The securing of supplies of good quality butter and eggs during the summer months is a difficult problem for the housewife in some districts. Make some arrangement for obtaining the best in these lines and maintain a high standard. You will then be sure of this portion of the customer's trade which is also a holder on the rest. The merchant can also, by proper methods, build up a fair trade in smoked, pickled and cooked hams, and other lines of provisions. Those grocers who do not now handle them should consider the advisibility of doing so, as most customers like to be able to purchase all their food supplies at one store. This line will also give to the merchant a fair margin of profit if he manages it with care. See that your meats are kept where they will not lose weight by drying out and give attention to disposing of the ends of hams and sides.

The Seed Trade.

In most parts of the country the big part of the seed trade is just nicely getting under way and the merchant should give it, prover attention. Display at the beginning of the season is a mighty good move, but it is also of value at any time, showing customers that you still have complete stocks. Now is the time to push the sale of garden and flower seeds. Make a display on one of the counters and suggest this line to all customers who enter during the next couple of days. Then, in about a week, do the same thing again. The season for seed corn begins in May and dealers who handle it should be making preparations by getting the farmer interested now.

Larger Receipts Make Butter Easier

The Arrival of Butter is Larger, With a Consequent Drop in Prices—Live Hogs are Steady— Provisions in Montreal are Easier—Supplies of Eggs are Not as Large as Expected—Prices are Steady.

Live hog prices show a little steadier feeling this week, Canadian markets ruling about the same, while United States markets, with a fairly active arrival of hogs, are a shade higher. The old country market for provisions is reported dull. Montreal provisions are easier in accordance with the drop in live hogs there last week.

The steadiness noticeable in live hogs this week has led some dealers to believe that perhaps the bottom has been reached. During the past few months prices have been materially reduced, and with the improvement in trade which is expected, and which is already being felt, they have hopes that the provision market may be put in a more favorable condition.

Still, there are differences of opinions. Patrick Cudahy of the Cudahy Packing Company, Chicago, is authority for the statement that provisions will be lower, while an exchange which generally is reliable, says: "There is nothing 'bullish' in the situation at the present time, neither do we expect to see prices go a great deal lower."

Egg arrivals have not been as large as expected, following the close of Lent. Some dealers hint that they are being stored. At any rate, shipments have been curtailed, and with a fairly large demand, prices continue steady.

Butter, however, is feeling the effects of large arrivals and prices are easier. The demand continues favorable. The arrival of new make will control future prices to a large extent, while the quantity of old make will also be a factor. In some centres the amount of this held stock is conceded to be quite large, and in others small. One dealer states that the demand which centered on choicest for so long, is now broadening.

In regard to the butter market it may be noted that cream is bringing a lower price in the United States than it is in Canada just now, with the result that Canadian farmers are not shipping their cream as was done last summer. This cream is therefore being made into butter, hence one of the reasons for the present plentitude of the new make butter. Prices show the effect of the new receipts in the drop that has occurred during the past week.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—With the exception of a further decline in lard of ¼ cent per pound, there are no features to the provision market this week. Live and dressed hogs are unchanged, as are also the other pork products. General trade is gradually becoming more satisfactory to wholesale dealers.

Butter.—The expected has happened in the butter market. Arrivals of both creamery and dairy have increased in volume and prices are a full cent lower than those of last week. Demand continues quite brisk. The supplies of old butter are thought to be quite limited on this market.

Eggs.—Egg prices have not made the downward flight some dealers believed they would, after the close of Lent. This week they remain unchanged and at the same figure as the week preceding Easter. Supplies for some reason are not coming forward in any large quantity, while demand is keeping at a good steady volume. However, egg arrivals may show an increase at any time.

Butter. — Heavy receipts have been pressing the market down, and locally it is weak. New milk creamery is arriving freely, receipts showing a big increase over the figures for the same time last year. Demand is good, but it is not sufficient to meet the present supplies.

Eggs.—Receipts of eggs are not as liberal as they were a week ago, showing a falling off that suggests the cold storage route for what would be the surplus. The market is practically unchanged. Prices are steady before a good demand, and the surplus stocks are going into cold storage for use next winter. A recent report says a Chicago firm offers to sell eggs to local dealers at 17 cents a doz., to be delivered next January, and to be held in cold storage at Chicago until that time at the expense of the American house. Should the reciprocity compact be embraced and the present slight duty removed, Montreal will likely get cheaper eggs. The agreement is said to be under consideration, and if carried out on a big scale would surely alter local conditions.

Cheese.—The market is quiet. Receipt of new make are coming in fairly liberal. At Brockville recently 600 boxes, mostly of colored, were sold at 11 cents for both kinds. The factories are reported almost all open again, and from now on offerings may be expected to show a weekly increase.

Butter.—A drop of four cents per pound in Manitoba creamery bricks has taken place during the week. Large stocks of storage butter have been offered on the market and this has resulted in bringing about the decline in prices. One speculator who buoght butter last fall offered two car loads on the market at a price, it is said, 5 cents below what it had cost him to that date. Eastern creamery bricks are also a little weaker but not so marked, while dairy butter remains unchanged. Receipts of sweet cream to the city are by no means heavy and local creameries stated that they could use a great deal more than they are getting for the ice cream and fresh cream trade of the city. Sour cream is coming in in fair quantities but more could also be used.

Eggs.—The price of eggs this week is slightly easier owing to the increased receipts. Some firms are offering 16½ cents while some are a half cent higher. Lower levels are looked for as the season advances.

Cheese.—Prices remain unchanged from last week and trade is still normal. Prevailing quotations are 14½ to 15 cents for old and 13½ to 14 cents for new.

Rolled Oats Advance 20 Cents a Barrel

Announcement Made on Tuesday—Higher Oat Market Responsible—Flour is Unchanged—Wheat is Higher Than a Week Ago—Russian Crop Report Causes Rise in Values—The Conditions of American Crop Continues Favorable—Cornmeal is Steady.

The feature of the cereal market this week was the announcement of an advance in rolled oats of 20 cents per barrel due to the recent rise in the oat market.

The Winnipeg exchange is particularly strong on this grain. Conditions in regard to supplies have caused some dealers to wonder if the advances in oats of late were altogether warranted, and if they will maintain their steady position. Within the past week there has, however, been an improvement in the export demand for oats. An exchange says: "The mid-April suns are transforming the pasture fields which are always something of a factor in the markets for coarse grains, and this, and the fact that May is now only a week away, has quickened popular interest in the stories of the combination in Western oats existing in the Winnipeg market. The line of oats carried by the Grain Growers' company, the selling agents of a large number of Western farmers, is said to amount to something like 4,000,000 bushels. It has been somewhat erroneously described as a corner in oats. No corner actually exists but a good deal depends, nevertheless, upon what the May deliveries of oats bring forth. Some grain growers themselves in addition to holding back their oats, have become buyers as individuals."

The corn market also is ruling firmer and cornmeal in sympathy is steady.

Some mills report a slight increase in the demand for flour, but taken generally there has been but small improvement in trade since the reduction in price. The business passing now is mostly in small lots.

Wheat shows more strength than it did a week ago, crop reports from different parts of the world having had an effect on the market. One feature was a cable from Russia stating that the estimate of winter wheat there on April 15th, was 76 per cent. against 84 per cent. for the same time last year. Some dealers however, fear a reaction because of the continued favorableness of the United States crop situation. One dealer in speaking of this crop said, "though the winter wheat crop is getting along well, there is still plenty of chance for trouble before it is harvested while the spring crop is just seeding."

MONTREAL.

TORONTO.

Flour.—There is no particular change in the flour situation. The reduction in price has failed to increase the amount of new business to any great extent, buying being done in smalll quantities. Local wheat in sympathy with higher values elsewhere was advanced as high as 99½ cents for No. 1 Northern at the beginning of the week but has taken on a little easier feeling since then.

Cereals.—In sympathy with the higher values for oats, rolled oats and oatmeal have been advanced 20 cents per barrel. TWELVE REASONS WHY SOME PEOPLE FAIL.

They are always watching the clock —not to see how much they can do in a certain time, but so as not to work a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.

They always grumble at everything that truns up. "Why can't some one else do this" is their constant whine.

They are only punctual at going out to lunch and leaving for the night. To turn up punctually to work in the morning would never occur to them.

They have no confidence in themselves —nor do they think it necessary to acquire any.

They are always asking questions—and never seem able to remember the answers thereto, considering the number of times they ask the same thing.

They always say "I forgot" when any omission is brought to their notice, but they never make the slightest attempt to remember next time.

They are never ready for the next move—they prefer to live in a chronic state of "unreadiness."

They never on any account put the least "life" or "go" into their work. One would think to look at them they were in a state bordering on coma.

They never learn anything from their mistakes nor from anything else. When they do anything right it's by accident not design.

They never dare act upon their own judgment, nor do they trouble to learn how. "Let Jones settle this, as I'm not going to be responsible" is a typical remark of theirs.

They try to make "bluff" take the place of "ability"—which shows what a very poor intelligence they must possess, for "bluff" never can score in the long run.

They prefer to employ any slipshod rule-of-thumb method — being far too lazy to learn even the simplest of systems.

THE CONSUMER TROUBLE.

Toronto, April 20.—The wholesale grocers and fruitmen of Vancouver, B.C., have refused to sell to restaurants and hotels at wholesale prices. As a result it is stated that a number of brokers have come into existence to take advantage apparently of this market opportunity. The grocers and fruitmen have written to E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Dominion R.M.A., to ascertain how to deal with the problem thus presented.

Fruits and Vegetables Show More Life

Warmer Weather Responsible for Better Demand—Number of Lines Show Increased Trade—Tomatoes Continue Strong—Oranges are Also Steadier—Bananas are Going Out Freely—Report on Sicily Lemon Crop—Apples are Getting in Small Compass.

Thanks to the warmer weather, trade in fruits and vegetables is taking on more life. Business was backward for a time on account of the changeable weather, but is now expected to improve.

The tomato situation in Florida continues strong with the crop nearing a close, the east having completed its shipments, while from the west of the peninsula goods will continue to come for perhaps a couple of weeks longer. After that this article will be imported from Texas and Mississippi, and later on from Tennessee, while still farther distant is the New Jersey crop. When that comes, however, the home grown product will then be ready for the market.

The orange market is steadier, although the crop continues large. Good shippers are scarce and for a while the navels coming forward showed some waste, so that to be sure of good quality, higher prices were asked. The demand on Canadian markets is quite heavy now.

The more favorable weather has induced a better movement in a number of lines. The banana trade is good, dealers stating that the best months for this fruit are April, May and June. Pineapples are receiving more attention also. Porto Ricans are being received now, but shipments from Florida will not commence until on in May. The crop is later in Florida than last year and will be light.

Lemons are feeling the effect also of the summer demand and are steady in price. A report on Sicilian lemons says, "A heavy windstorm about the end of March damaged the crop nearly 20 per cent. It now looks as if the groves would turn out an average crop. Shipments to America, as regards volume, will depend to a certain extent on the European demand, which just now is active. The conditions and quality of the crop are good, the lemons promising to be sound-keeping stock."

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Apples are getting down to a rather small compass. The demand is reported fair and prices have been well maintained. The summer demand for bananas is beginning to make itself felt, the peddlers helping to get rid of large quantities already. Grape fruit is enjoying a good trade and lemons are showing the first signs of a new movement. North Carolina strawberries are now on the market the first car of 224 crates having arrived this week.

The price is a little easier and wholesalers report a better spirit on the part of retailers. Oranges are steady. The market on the whole possesses quite a healthy tone just now and the trade are handling heavy stocks of both fruit and vegetables.

Vegetables.—Dealers are quite pleased with the character business has shown of late. The demand is quite general and the new vegetables are meeting with a good call. Prices have not been changing much of late. Potatoes are a little firmer and in steady demand. Tomatoes are no easier in price, but in spite of this fact the enquiry for them is considerable. Radishes, beets, cabbage, celery and other new lines are moving out well. The weather is having a beneficial effect.

Fruit.—Trade this week has been quite satisfactory, an increase in demand for a number of lines being noticeable. Bananas are now going out freely. Apples are not at all plentiful and $8.00 a barrel is being asked for No. 1 Spys. Tomatoes are strong at present quotations and a further stiffening in price is looked for. Grapefruit—both Florida and Jamaica—is a little higher this week. The arrival of oranges is not large and prices have been increased somewhat. Strawberries are doing fairly well. Lemons are steady at present quotations.

Vegetables.—Dealers are finding no complaint with the present trade in vegetables. Florida cabbage is not enjoying any great trade but other lines are doing fairly well. Asparagus in large and small bunches; spinach in hampers and barrels, and wax and green beans in hampers are offered on the market this week. The market is about bare of Spanish onions, but there will be some arrivals next week which will probably rule at $3.50 per case. "Parsnips are a drug on the market," remarked one dealer who is quoting them at 40 cents per bag.

The potato situation is about the same as a week ago and larger supplies may have an effect at any time. "A great many potatoes that should come to this market are being shipped to the West," said one dealer.

Fish - Oysters

Trade in Fish Turns to Fresh Caught

Dealers Enquire for This Class, Which are Arriving Quite Freely, But Will Soon be in Good Supply — Frozen Stock Still in Demand—Better Catches of Fresh Fish on Eastern Coast—Lobsters are more Plentiful Also.

A fair demand for fish keeps the market rather active with enquiries for fresh fish being especially noticeable. Haddock, cod and shad are arriving freely and prices are at a low figure. Halibut are scarce for the time being and an advance in price is reported but is likely to be only temporary. Pickerel are off the market until after May 15th owing to the close season for this fish. Frozen fish are still in demand and are unaffected by the warm weather, thanks to cold storage. The prices are naturally lower than those quoted for fresh stocks. Of the smoked fish, new fillets and haddies are arriving regularly and are meeting with a good demand. Other lines are in good supply with a fair business reported. The catches of fresh fish on the eastern coast are increasing, Nova Scotia reporting larger arrivals last week than at any period during the present year. There is, however, a good demand for fresh fish at the present time, so that prices will quite likely rule steady. There has also been a marked improvement in the lobster catches and prices are slightly easier.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—A number of price changes are noted as the result of variations in supply. The market is for the most part steady with demand satisfactory. Pickerel are off the list until after the close season which continues until May 15th. Fresh fish is finding rather liberal enquiries and is getting perhaps the bulk of the present call. Shad, halibut and haddock are among the favorites now with the first two the more plentiful.

NOVA SCOTIA.

More fresh fish were marketed here this week than at any period during the present year. All the local Bankers brought in good catches of cod, haddock and halibut. The latter is plentiful, more so than for many months, but despite this fact there has been no decline, locally, in the price. Some fresh salmon taken from Nova Scotian waters were offered on the local market this week. The price asked was eighty cents per pound, and it is needless to say that at that figure the demand was not very brisk.

There has been a marked improvement in the lobster market since last report. All along the coast fishermen are making good catches and heavy shipments are being made to the American market. On one shipment alone, 1,200 crates went forward, and the dumping of 40,000 lobsters on the Boston market at one time caused prices to crumble. The home market is also well supplied, and the price has dropped to $1.80 per dozen, a decline of sixty cents from the figures of last week. There is a good demand for dry fish. Shipments to the foreign markets are light, this being due principally to the fact that there are no fish to sell. Salt fish prices continue firm, and will remain so until the new cure is on the market, which will be in about a month's time.

Herring are now striking in at several points along the coast, but the fish are small. Mackerel are reported moving North on the American coast, but it will be several weeks yet before they reach the waters on the coast of Nova Scotia.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Receipts of fish during the last two or three weeks have been rather light, though prices are about the same as usual. Haddock are scarce, but cod are in fair supply. Halibut are now being received in limited quantities from Brier Island and Halifax. Gaspereaux are a little cheaper and while the bulk of the stock is coming from down the bay, some good catches have been made in the harbor lately. Delaware shad are offered and local shad are looked for about the middle of May. A couple of salmon were taken in the harbor last week, but the usual spring run is not looked for until the latter part of May. Lobsters continue very scarce and high. Thus far, the weather has been cold and the latter part of the week there was a snow storm, but it is hoped that with the advent of warmer weather, conditions will improve.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—There is nothing of any special importance to the fish market this week. As is natural for the present time, trade is inclined to dullness. In another week there will be a good supply of fresh fish on the market when trade will take on the steady character which it generally does for a month or so after the close of Lent. Fresh trout at 14 cents a pound is added to this list this week.

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND CANNED SALMON.

During the year 1910 British Columbia produced 762,201 cases of packed salmon, totalling in value $4,192,105. The production of fresh salmon amounted to 2,500,000 pounds. Two Kinds of Clerks—One Kind of Goods

Comparison of Selling Methods Employed by Two Clerks in Answering an Enquiry Regarding Pickles—Why One Sold and One Failed—How Good Intelligent Salesman Handled Customer Who Did Not Know What She Wanted.

Ability to make intelligent suggestions, perfect knowledge of the goods carried, and of different methods which may be used in their preparation for the table, go to make up a great advantage to any clerk behind a grocery counter. An example of this was recently shown in a Canadian retail grocery.

A customer entered the store to get something for the evening meal. She was uncertain what to buy. When the clerk came forward and inquired, she said: "Well, I want something for supper but I hardly know what to select."

Now this clerk did not allow his customer to stand there at that counter endeavoring to decide but at once offered some suggestions and showed his knowledge of salesmanship by carrying the sale through successfully.

Selling Salmon Loaf.

"How about salmon, Mrs. B." We have that Blank brand still; you find that good salmon, do you not?" asked the clerk.

"Yes, it is a good salmon," she replied, but we have had it so often lately that I am tired of it."

"Have you tried salmon loaf?" questioned the clerk, "It is very nice," and he launched forth into a description of the method of preparing this dish, concluding with the remark: "We have a lot of customers using salmon in that manner now."

"I believe I will try that," replied the customer, "You may send me two cans of it, please."

"Now what else, Mrs. B?" queried the clerk, "would you like some of these sweet pickles?" denoting a glass display jar on the counter; "they have a taste that I am sure would please you."

"How much are they?"

"These are worth 40 cents per quart," said the clerk.

"Forty cents a quart," she replied with emphasis, "that is very high." With some clerks this would have ended the talk on that line, but not so with this one.

Selling Pickles.

"Yes, they are higher than the ordinary," he admitted, "but then you must remember that they are an extra good pickle. Just try one yourself," handing her a fork and opening the jar, "and you will quite agree with me I think. Of course, we have some others at 30 cents but I think you would like these best."

The trial of the pickle evidently convinced her, for without any further comments, she ordered a quart.

Now he might have sold the cheaper article which probably would not have brought any repeat trade in this line but he knew that she would like the taste of the better one and if she once bought them, would likely come back for more.

Quite different was another attempt to sell pickles, witnessed in another store. Here also were two grades of pickles, displayed on either end of the counter. This time the customer enquired about them and pointing to the jar which contained the better grade she enquired "are those sweet pickles?"

"Yes," answered the clerk but made no further efforts in attempting a sale.

"How much are they worth?" the customer asked.

A Comparison.

"Those are worth 40 cents a quart," he replied in a tone which seemed to imply that he was asking twice the regular price, "but those others are only worth 30 cents," he continued, as if the cheaper article was a bargain compared with the other.

"What is the difference between the two?"

"I think those are old country pickles. I guess it costs more to bring them here," he continued without mentioning the detail of quality as the other clerk had done.

The customer did not seem to be favorably impressed with either, so she did not buy at all. In the first case the clerk had both suggested the article and sold it and in the latter the customer had inquired. This clerk had even then failed to make a sale.

Splendid Food Values of Sago And of Tapioca

By J. D. Bell.

It is very difficult to understand why the demand for tapioca and sago, which should really be necessities in every household, is not greater than at present. Apparently the grocers throughout the country do not bring these articles sufficiently before the notice of their customers. Tapioca, either medium pearl, or seed pearl, is nutritious. It is easily digestible, and very palatable, and can be made up into a variety of dishes. Now that the warmer weather is coming on, it makes a delicious dessert taken in conjunction with stewed fruits, or made up into a pudding with milk and custard. It is especially recommended in the case of invalids, or those suffering from weak digestion, and it is a fact that the general public do not really know the value of this food product. It is of a kindred nature to arrowroot, whose nutritive value is known the world over.

The same advantages apply to sago, which is a product very much akin to tapioca, yet of quite a distinct flavor.

The production of these articles is being very much curtailed in the East, because of being supplanted by rubber, and values are gradually being raised. If dealers would take a greater interest in these two foodstuffs there could be easily worked up a larger demand for them.

CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION.

American Said to be Spreading New Dodge in Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., April 27.—The grocers of Vancouver are up against a new dodge, originated by a couple of Americans, who operate under the name of the Consumers' Purchasers' Association, and call at the houses in the well-to-do sections of the city. They propose, it is said, that if the housewife joins, paying a fee of $2, $3 or $5, whatever sum can be successfully annexed, she can get her goods a certain percentage cheaper. A list of houses giving the reduced rate is printed on the back of the membership slip.

This matter was discussed at the meeting of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association on Tuesday night, and a pronouncement was made against any such proposition. It is in such instances as these that association benefits work out, for with a central organization they are soon heard of and discussed. The members were unanimous against becoming a party of the Consumers' Purchasers' Association.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—Rice as a Food

Some Bits of Information in Connection With This Widely-Used Cereal That May Be of Interest to Dealers Here and There—Feeds Nearly Half the World — Its Values — The Almost Innumerable Names—How it is Prepared.

The consumption of rice the world over is large, but the demand for it in Canada could be increased. Its sale in this country is not as large as it might be. There are several arguments that the grocer could use to create a larger sale for this foodstuff among his customers. In the first place, it is comparatively cheap, this being true even in the higher grades.

Rice is especially adapted to the wants of meat-eating peoples, and is one of the lightest, most wholesome and digestible foods we have. It gives but little work on the digestive organs, and is considered to be an excellent flesh builder. The nutritive value of one pound of rice is given as about equal to that of 4 pounds of potatoes. It should, however, be properly cooked.

Feeds Half the World.

An exchange recently said in regard to rice: "There is no other vegetable product so widely consumed. It forms the staple food of one half of the human race. It is the chief food of the people in China, Japan, Burmah and Siam, and it is estimated to be the staple food of perhaps 90 million people in India."

This cereal has upwards of 1,300 names, and several thousand distinct forms and shades of color, because of the different climates and soils, but the two principal divisions are "upland" and "sea level" rice.

The plant very much resembles the oat in shape and color. In some of the wet, marshy, tropical countries, the wild plant is as common as grass, but it is now cultivated in most of the hot and moist climates. After rice has been sown it requires flooding, with several inches of water until it sprouts. Each seed sends up several stocks, the plant growing from one to three feet high. Two crops are often obtained in a single year.

Best Known Kinds.

The growths best known in this country are Rangoon, Patna, Japan, Java and Carolina. The largest consumption is of the cheaper grades, but there is a steady increase in the totals of the better grades being used of late, and Japan and Patna are receiving considerable attention. The highest grade is "Carolina," which is grown on the low, marshy grounds of South Carolina. It is very broad and short, and usually very broken up, and is superior because it boils softer than the other kinds.

The rice has three parts—husks, inner cuticle, and the grain itself, as it is ordinarily offered. The inner cuticle grows fast to the grain, and has to be worn off by friction, forming a residue called rice meal, which is used as cattle food. This cuticle is rich in gluten and in China is eaten with the rest of the grain.

The inner cuticle of the grain, while it is very hard, and grows quite tightly on the grain itself, splits away without much trouble when subjected to an end-to-end pressure, leaving the white grain perfectly clean.

To be Well Cooked.

Rice has a highly nutritive value, but should be properly cooked. One way is to thoroughly wash the rice, first in cold water, next in tepid, and then in hot. Place it in a well closed vessel, and add for every cup of rice two of water. Bring this rapidly to a boil, and let it continue boiling about an hour until all the water has steamed away, and finally put a few pieces of butter on the rice before taking the vessel off the fire.

Quite a large quantity of the grain is now used in the manufacture of puffed rice, which is a very appetizing and easily digested food, the taste being somewhat similar to that of toasted nuts. Each kernel in the process of manufacture is puffed to eight times its natural size—said to be four times as porous as bread.

The whole, plump grains are sealed up in bronze metal guns. The guns are then revolved for sixty minutes in a heat of 550 degrees. That heat turns the moisture in the grain to steam, and the pressure becomes tremendous. Suddenly the guns are unsealed and the steam explodes. The grains are puffed to eight times their natural size without breaking a single coat. Just the plain rice that is sold in every grocery store is used in the making of the puffed rice. This is information that the grocer should be able to use in selling this article.

The Canadian Dealer Reads His Trade Paper for the News it Contains—

And advertising is news. It is news about his own business—about the goods he sells—and therefore he reads the advertisements.

If his trade paper were not a reputable, an authoritative, trade paper, he would not be influenced greatly by what he reads. But he is influenced in his buying by reading the advertisements in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

"Crown Brand" CORN SYRUP

made an extensive increase last year. This increase was due to three causes:

FIRST, Extensive advertising—the bill-boards from coast to coast are telling the people about "Crown Brand."

SECOND, the quality of "Crown Brand"—the user who once tries it comes back for more.

THIRD, (and by no means least important) the grocer's margin of profit in "Crown Brand" is all it should be.

Your individual sales should have been more. Were they? Let people know you're selling "Crown Brand" Corn Syrup; GET YOUR SHARE.

IT WILL PAY TO CONSIDER

QUALITY FIRST

THE quality of a product depends upon the materials used, a thorough knowledge of the product and the careful application, in the preparation of the product, of the knowledge possessed.

Quality products may be a shade higher in price but they are worth the difference, because once you sell a product of quality the future sale of that product is assured, by reason of the complete satisfaction it gives to the purchaser.

MACONOCHIE'S

QUALITY PRODUCTS

STAND the test of quality, because only selected raw materials and the most modern methods of preparation are used and in addition a generation's experience has raised MACONOCHIE'S level of preparing foodstuffs to a fine art. The difference between MACONOCHIE'S products, which are quality products, and inferior products is that while inferior products make dissatisfied customers and create loss of confidence in you.

Maconochie's products make future sales

MACONOCHIE'S—Pickles, Peels, Pan Yan Pickle, Pan Yan Sauce, Fish, Marmalade, Jams, Worcester Sauce, etc., etc.

DOLLARS and CENTS

Versus

BRAINS and SENSE

A dollar safely banked is better than two dollars' worth of doubtful merchandise in the store. The daily depreciation in goods of questionable character is a steady and startlingly heavy drain on your invested capital. After all it is not so much a question of Dollars and Cents as Brains and Sense, when you are stocking up, friend.

Quality is the pivot on which your wheel-of-fortune turns constantly. It lubricates business. Without it you will be as helpless as a rudderless ship. With the Brains and Sense that you possess, you'll certainly stock the two quality articles that we list below:—

Griffin & Skelley's Canned Fruits

Picked by skillful hands, chosen by ever-watchful eyes, packed in the Factory of Precision—the best that Dollars and Cents and Brains and Sense can offer particular folks.

Canned Apricots, Peaches, Pears, Cherries, Plums and other wanted table fruits. Quality Goods!

Griffin & Skelley's Fine Asparagus

The natural, delicate, tender and toothsome quality of Griffin & Skelley's Asparagus is a bulwark of safety for the grocer who fears for the permanency of his over particular trade. The private beds that produce this famous brand are guarded night and day by those who, seeking with might and main to hold the high standard up, never relax their vigilance over the growing stalks.

A Statement in Full

That is what the user of a McCaskey Account Register gives his customers after each purchase.

At the time of the sale the merchant who uses the McCaskey Gravity Account Register System posts and totals each account to date. He cuts out all useless bookkeeping (posting and copying from one book to another), prevents errors in his accounts and disputes with customers, because each patron has the same record of his account and in the same handwriting as he has, prevents forgotten charges, that is, goods sold but never charged, collects his money automatically and faster than any human agency could collect it, has an automatic credit limit and is protected against loss of insurance in case of fire because with the McCaskey System proof of loss can be furnished in an hour's time to the satisfaction of any insurance adjuster.

Seventy thousand retail merchants are using the McCaskey System and tell us that it pays for itself several times in the course of the first year it is installed.

Only One Writing

The McCASKEY SYSTEM

First and Still the Best

You don't have to wait until the man next door or on the corner has installed the McCaskey. Then it will be too late. Act now! Please your trade by giving them a statement in full with each purchase, cut out useless bookkeeping and get more information about your business with less expenditure of time, labor and money.

A letter or postal card will bring you information without obligation on your part to purchase.

Or, tear out this advertisement, sign your name and address and we'll know you want information.

COLES
COFFEE MILLS

The pedestal mill illustrated here is the latest and newest design in coffee mills of this description, owing to the fact that it is constructed along the most advanced principle that has yet come into use.

The grinders both run at different speeds, as will be seen by the construction of the mill.

It is an acknowledged fact that: Granulating can be done more efficiently at high speed, while pulverizing can be done with less heating of the coffee at a much lower speed. These are indisputable facts.

Let the judgment of experts guide you, for they all decide unanimously in favor of this type of mill, which is Patent Applied For, and manufactured exclusively by us. Price—$150.00.

Made also for counter use. Price $135 00.

Illustrated catalog sent on request.

A SOURCE OF PROFIT IN ARROWROOT

One of the best gifts of the New World has only recently come to its own in a large way. For a century or more St. Vincent has shipped the bulk of the world's supply because St. Vincent Arrowroot is the best.

Recently, the enormous increase of the use of cocoa and chocolates and the study of domestic science and nursing have brought it into common use among a much larger portion of the people.

There is a large profit for the dealer in handling Arrowroot as it rapidly makes its way among the consumers.

Arrowroot makes delicious Blanc Manges, Puddings, Biscuits, Cakes, etc., and is invaluable as a diet for invalids.

Samples, recipes, grades and prices given on application to the Secretary of the St. Vincent Arrowroot Growers' and Exporters' Association

BeC areful How You Buy Your Refrigerator

The damp, musty, stagnant air "Ice Box" is a breeding place for germs and disease, and the average refrigerator is merely an elaborate Ice Box.

Proper ventilation and perfect circulation of cold, dry air is only properly obtained in the "Eureka" Refrigerator, which has an exclusive and patented system of air circulation, and this guarantees an absolutely dry refrigerator.

We have been twenty-five years exclusively manufacturing refrigerators, and our present models have all our knowledge and experience worked into them.

In the matter of sanitation in materials used, in design and finish, in price, there is no refrigerator on the market can compare with the "EUREKA."

New PEAS (with MINT) in Cooking Nets (Farrow's Patent)

You may have new peas now, or at any time of the year, if you buy Farrow's "Patent Net" Peas and cook them as directed.

FARROW'S 'Patent Net' PEAS

are the finest early green peas, gathered at the beginning of the season when peas are sweetest, most tender and delicious. Our process preserves ALL their natural flavour. When cooked they are so delicious and tender that you cannot detect them from fresh garden peas. They are very easily cooked and remarkably cheap —a 10 cent Net provides liberal portions for 8 people. Farrow's "Patent Net" Peas are English grown, absolutely pure, free from all preservatives and colouring matter.

The grandest 10 cent line the Old Country has ever sent us.

HIGH GRADE FOOD SPECIALTIES

JAPAN TEA

Our special brands of Japan Tea put out under the Victor, Raven, and Hoopoo labels, are leaders in their respective grades. These teas are slightly colored which gives them a silvery appearance, and in most parts of Ontario helps their sale.
Reports are just to hand with the information that the Japanese Government has decided to prohibit the coloring of teas for the future, and, in consequence, none but sun-dried uncolored will be obtainable out of the new crop.

Dealers whose trade prefers a little color to their Japans may obtain good value from our stock as long as it lasts.

Where is the Principle or Justice in allowing 10 per cent. discount to one grocer, 7 per cent. to another and 3 per cent. to another, in the same town, handling the same goods under the same conditions?

This is what some of our opponents are doing, and although it may be answered that the 10 per cent. is taken off a 500 lb. lot, yet we know of retailers who were only allowed 5 per cent. off 500 lbs. and others who have only been allowed 3 per cent. off 300 lbs.

"SALADA" has only one price to every one of our retail friends. The merchant who buys "SALADA" proves his friendship to us and we reciprocate by treating him as well as we do any of his competitors---we do not make "fish of one and flesh of another."

Insists Capital is Basis of Figuring

St. Catharines Correspondent Again Enters the List With Henry Johnson, Jr. as to Best Method of Figuring Profits—Maintains Perfect Mathematics Only Needed to Prove His Point—Some More Demonstrations—As Teacher of Future Grocers He Desires to Have Vexed Questions Settled.

By C. E. Jamieson.

Here is another article from the pen of C. E. Jamieson, St. Catharines, Ont. dealing with the figuring of profits:—

In replying to Henry Johnson, Jr.'s remarks in The Canadian Grocer of April 14th and 21st, I desire to submit my appreciation of his courtesy towards my criticism and towards myself. Regarding my line of business, I may say that I am in charge of the commercial department in the local collegiate. As my pupils become grocers and business men of various kinds, I, too, am interested in the question introduced by Mr. Johnson. I may say that I never considered his point of view before, but I am in one respect like Dr. Glashan, inspector of schools in Ottawa; whenever I hear anyone taking one side of an argument, I like to take the opposite side, and fight to the best of my ability, for it is in this way that we may most nearly ascertain the truth of the matter. I trust then, that Mr. Johnson will forgive me for still keeping "on my own side of the ring."

Just Bad Mathematics.

Naturally I feel gratified that Mr. Johnson admits that I am strictly right as a lexicographer and mathematician. And if the mathematician is correct in taking the point of view which I assumed, should not the grocer, whose very existence depends, if not on theoretical, at least on practical mathematics, accept it also? If, in taking this stand, he loses thereby, is it not but fair to say that his incomplete knowledge of the mathematics involved is the reason of the loss, since the mathematical method is strictly correct? In fact it can be proven by the very axiomatical character of mathematics.

Play Upon Words.

With regard to Mr. Johnson's remarks on the dictionary, it appears to me that he has merely made a play upon words, and has not proven anything with respect to the question at issue. I must take exception to his statement that usage and custom should ALWAYS take precedence over text-books. Usage and custom do not ALWAYS show improvement or even equal excellence when compared with the experience of the past. Would Mr. Johnson say that the customary slangy language of to-day excels the purity and beauty of the earlier tongue? Would he say that the latest engineering devices for lighting weights are superior to those used in the building of the pyramids?

Cash Accounting.

I am glad that my new friend—the enemy for the purpose of this discussion—has defined the terms he is about to use, as I believe that difference in the definition of terms is often responsible for the great apparent divergence between many schools of philosophy. I cannot, however, agree that the question of cost accounting does not enter into this discussion. Cost accounting MUST, by its very nature, enter into the trading, as well as the manufacturing business.

The First Article.

Let us go back for a moment to Mr. Johnson's first article. He says: "You pay 80 cents for an article. Add 25 per cent. of cost and your selling price will be $1. Now, at the end of the season, if you conclude to close out, deduct 25 per cent., and what you have left will be 75 cents—5 cents less than actual cost to you. Had it been your rule to figure ALWAYS from the selling end, you would have figured a profit of 20 per cent. on the sale at $1 and when you closed out you would have deducted 20 per cent., and then you would still have your original 80 cents—actual, original cost." Is it right to call a thing a SHEEP one time and a HORSE another? He added 25 per cent. of the COST, and then took away 25 per cent. of the SELLING PRICE.

Hybrid Methods.

This is not figuring on the cost. It is hybrid method. Then he says that if you had figured on the selling end, you would have come out alright. Now, to borrow Mr. Johnson's own phrase, I submit that he has here answered his own argument, and that if he had figured ALWAYS on the cost, he would have come out alright. For instance he adds 25 per cent. of the cost, making the selling price $1. At the end of the season, he subtracts 25 per cent. of the cost, which nets him exactly what he paid for the article.

That Locomotive Deal.

Regarding the method mentioned in connection with the sale of Baldwin locomotives, I agree with Mr. Johnson that it cannot apply in exactly the same way to the sale of a cake of yeast. But does Mr. Johnson's method fit this case exactly? Let us see! It is absolutely impossible to sell every article for its actual cost plus the profit desired. In the first place it is manifestly impossible to divide the expenses accurately with regard to the article mentioned. Mr. Johnston admits that the actual cost might vary from 15 cents to $1.25; would he charge the woman $1.25 for the yeast, if it had actually cost him that much? Assuredly not. In the second place, again, you cannot always sell an article for the actual cost plus the desired profits, but must depend largely on the market price. If you cannot sell for the market price, and keep down your expenses so as to leave yourself a margin of profit, you will have to quit business. Thus we see that my worthy adversary's method will not prove so much superior to what we may call the Baldwin method.

The Horse Deal.

My illustration regarding a house is not disputed, but Mr. Johnson attacks my stand concerning the sale of the horse. He contends that the seller, not only theoretically, but ACTUALLY in many cases gets the money. We will suppose that in the present transaction he DOES actually get the money. Does it all belong to him, or is he actually a bailee for part of it? A burglar may ACTUALLY get all a man's money, but it doesn't even THEORETICALLY belong to him. Again, in connection with this transaction, I fail to see wherein I have answered my own argument. The grocer is not a broker unless his stock is owned by the wholesale house. In that case, he is a broker, and would receive a certain percentage of the sales; but if he owns his stock, he is selling it for himself, and makes a certain percent profit on the capital he has invested. With regard to the ruin involved in figuring on the 7 cents, Mr. Johnson answers himself in the first example of his first article, as I have shown above.

Grocer Shortens Work.

As to the question of figuring the cost of 9¾ lbs. of ham at 16 cents per lb., we have nothing to do in the present discussion. Suffice it to say that the present day grocer has shortened his work considerably, not by adopting some new principle at variance with mathematical rules, but by combining the same old principles.

Coming now to the question of the investment in stock. Apparently Mr. Johnson would put the purchaser of stocks and the depositor in banks in one class, and the grocer, who not only lets his money accumulate, but gives of his own work in addition, in another class. I hold, however, that the purchaser of stocks and the grocer are in exactly the same position. The clerks often do the actual work for the grocer, who acts as floorwalker, overseer, and investor of capital, in just the same way that the officials of a company do the work for the shareholders who reap the rewards of their labors. Finally, because the margin is narrow, and in order to indemnify the grocer for his miscalculation, Mr. Johnson would have give himself a little extra boost of over 20 per cent., a bonus, if you like. Hence, in order to make a gain of 20 per cent., he would have him sell an article for $6.20 which originally cost him but $4.96. Such a grocer would not be honest with himself. Of course, if he still retains his customers, "FIGURING" rather than pure business would pay him.

In conclusion, I must confess that curiosity was the chief reason for my entering the lists in the first place, but I may say that I am thoroughly interested, and I would like to see all your readers convinced, one way or the other.

Civil Servants Must Not be Harassed

Some Facts Dealing With the Smothering of Garnishee Amendment as Applied to the Civil Service at Ottawa, by Minister of Justice in Commons—No Sympathy for the Creditor —Not in Best Interest of Public.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, is amended by inserting the following sections immediately after section 47:

"47a. All moneys or salaries due or accruing due to any person employed by the Government of Canada shall be liable to attachment in each province of Canada, according to the laws and rules of procedure in force in such province.

"47b. The attachment or garnishee summons or order may be served on the Minister, deputy minister, chief officer, secretary or assistant secretary of the Department in which the debtor is employed, or on the chief officer or clerk of such Department or branch thereof if the debtor is employed outside of the City of Ottawa."

Above is given a true copy of a bill dealing with the garnishment of salaries of Dominion civil servants, submitted in the Commons at Ottawa for first reading on November 24th of last year.

It was presented by A. M. Beauparlant, one of the Quebec contingent, in the House, and was supported earnestly by him, as might be expected, and also by a number of other members, which might not have been expected.

Just Smothered.

But this bill, it is now believed, has came to an ignominious end. This, not because it was not a good bill, nor because it was calculated to do something not done elsewhere, but because Sir Alan Aylesworth, the Minister of Justice, said in the House on March 3rd last:

> "I am considering it from the standpoint alone of the public interest when I say that it would be better to leave untouched the wisdom of generations in this regard and not seek to make any change in the law which forbids the civil servant either to assign his salary directly or to effect the transfer of it by any other means."

That is why it failed; because of the argument of the Minister of Justice that the people of Canada would not be getting the fullest possible return for the money they have invested in the civil service of the country, if the civil servant should be left to the mercy of all and sundry dealers to whom he owed money for goods received. The civil servant was not to be bothered by collectors. He was created to pore over the country's business in a peace as profound as may be expected this side of the grave. It didn't matter that other civil servants, were even as other men, amenable to the common law, those who worked within the confines of the Government establishments in the capital, must be protected from such things. There was not even pity expressed for the dealer who supplied these employes of the Government with goods.

The Minister of Justice.

But if the dealer is to get an insight into the heart of this defence of the debtor proclivities of the civil servant, he must glance over the pages of Hansard to do so, for the public press have deemed this little smothering act as unworthy of their attention. The Canadian Grocer, accordingly reprints from the report of the House of Commons, of March 3rd last, some of the more important features of the address of Sir Alan Aylesworth. It begins after a few remarks of a congratulatory nature directed to Mr. Beauparlant:

> "I wish to say that, in my ideas on this subject, I am not actuated by any feeling of sympathy for the civil servant who does not pay his debts. To pay his debts is a man's first duty, if he be not acting contrary to his duty in incurring debts. But none the less, I must say that I look upon a proposition to change the law regarding the garnishment of the salaries of civil servants as one of very doubtful expediency indeed. The question is simply one of expediency, and the condition of the law which now prevents the seizure of the salary of civil servants is one which exists, not out of any consideration for these employes, but simply and wholly out of consideration for the public interests. It is entirely from that point of view that I question the desirability of making the change advocated by my hon. friend. I have seen it stated in legal works, as the reason for this rule of law, that the King cannot be brought into court against his own will, and, of course, we all recognize that it is the prerogative of the King to be sued only with his own assent upon the advice of his attorney general. That prerogative I regard as something of substantial advantage to the public, and I have no doubt that it may be quite accurate to describe the foundation of this indemnity from the process of garnishment which civil servants enjoy as resting upon that principle of law that the King is not to be brought before his own court and his own judges except upon his own assent, in the constitutional manner I have indicated."

Not in Public Interest.

Here follow a few words to the effect that Beauparlant felt the same difficulty when he framed the bill, and then the address goes on:

> The root of the objection is, in my judgment, that it would not be in the public interests that this should be permitted. Let me say why I am of that opinion. It is practically the same principle of law which precludes a civil servant from assigning his salary. The transfer of his salary which he might make, before receiving it, to any friend, if he wanted to protect himself, or to any creditor, or any person who might buy an instalment of his salary, would not be valid because it is against public policy. That has been the law from the earliest times, when law grew up in England by judicial decisions or judicial interpretations of what is the common law of that country. The principle of the thing is put by Baron Parke, recognized among English lawyers as one of the great masters of English common law in these words. Speaking of the Civil Service, he said:
> "The compensation allotted to him under this Act is by way of salary, the object of which is to enable him to maintain such a position in life as will save from the necessity of risking his character, by incurring those temptations which persons reduced to poverty are necessarily exposed to, and which would render him unfit person to be again employed as a servant of the Crown. For this purpose, public policy requires that he should not be permitted to assign it away."

Had no Sympathy.

The creditor knows presumably, and in most cases he does actually, what that man's salary is, when it is payable, just how much he can rely upon, and, therefore, the creditor acts with his eyes open if he allows a civil servant to get heavily into his debt. Under these circumstances, I do not feel much more sympathy with the creditor who is not able to enforce payment by process of law than I would feel for the civil servant who allows himself to get into the position I have described.

I think the law as it stands is in the interest of the people who have the right to get, for the money they pay to the civil servant, the best possible return in the shape of his whole time without his attention being distracted by the annoyance and harassing of creditors such as I have spoken of.

The Legislation Dead.

There is more of the criticism including the all-important sentence printed at the outset, but the damage had been done when the Minister of Justice had progressed this far. As a whole the Commons evinced only passive interest and although Arthur Meighen, of Portage la Prairie, spoke up in eloquent endorsation of Mr. Beauparlant's bill, and although he was supported in turn by Mr. Carvell, those who were behind the measure considered the legislation as dead when the Minister of Justice gave his final pronouncement.

At some time in the future some such amendment may meet with more encouragement than has this, and it may be that the Minister of Justice, whoever he may be at that time may look with other eyes on the question of immunity of the civil servant. Still it would seem that only the demands of a united and harmonious army of retailers.

Accordingly it will be interesting to watch the progress of the Co-Operative Society these Ottawa civil servants have but recently organized.

Harassed in the Office.

Sir Alan further argues that a civil servant can co-operate with his creditor and enable him to get into the same position by taking proceedings before a judge to attach the salary and have the Crown pay the creditor. Then he adds :

What, then, is the effect ? The effect necessarily is, if you assume, as you must, the case of a civil servant who is not paying his way—the effect necessarily is that the man whose salary has been attached and ordered to be paid to some creditor is harassed by the daily needs of his daily outgoings, and consequently is not in a position to give his undivided attention to the discharge of the duties of the public office which he fills. It is in the interests of the general public that they should get the best possible returns for the money they pay, and that cannot be accomplished if the civil servant is liable to the duns of the continually besetting creditor, and not only to that annoyance, but to seeing, possibly his salary taken from him against his own will, leaving him unable to provide for the actual necessities of his family.

I have not the slightest sympathy for the civil servant who gets himself into that position. * * * In fixing his salary it was the intention of parliament that it shall be adequate and that its payment should be assured—that there was to be a certain fixed and definite amount paid upon a certain fixed and definite day. * * *

KINGSTON ELECTIONS.

Kingston, Ont., May 4.—At a meeting of the Retail Merchants held Tuesday E. T. Steacy was elected president of the local association; W. H. Dyde, vice-president; George Mills, treasurer, and Howard Marshal,, secretary.

The Buffalo Grocery Co., Vancouver, B.C., suffered considerable loss by fire.

An early closing by-law was drafted by the retail merchants of Medicine Hat, Sask., on Monday.

BLENDED BARBADOS.

Bridgetown, Barbados, May 4.—On the ground that it is injurious to the island's staple industry the Barbados Agricultural Society are asking the Government to pass stringent legislation to control the blending of molasses. It has been learned here that certain blends were being made and exported as Barbados molasses, while extensive works are said to be in progress of erection to carry on such operations.

It is claimed that choice or muscovado molasses is mixed with vacuum pan in proportion of two of the former to one of the latter, and the resulting product exported as "Barbados." Molasses obtained by the vacuum pan process is of lower grade than that under the muscovado, and is lower also than the fancy, made direct from the cane.

Barbados is one of the few British colonies, continuing to produce the genuine old-fashioned molasses and the planting community is apprehensive that the industry may be injured by this blending.

Editorial Note.—This bill, as will be more fully shown in another part of The Grocer was introduced into Parliaby A. M. Beauparlant, member for St. Hyancinthe, Quebec. When it came up for discussion in March. Sir Alan Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, opposed it on the ground that were a garnishee law put into effect against the civil servant it would tend to lessen his usefulness to the country. Mr. Meighen, of Portage la Prairie, Man., and Mr. Carvell spoke in support of the Beauparlant measure, but it has, in all probability gone down into oblivion. Fuller explanations will be found in article dealing with this bill.

The Canadian Grocer.—Kindly explain in the valued columns of The Canadian Grocer, the business assessment act, now in force.

SUBSCRIBER.

Walkerton, Ont.

Editorial Note.—The business assessment in Ontario is computed on a certain percentage of the assessed value of the property (land and buildings) occupied or used for such a business. This is irrespective of any other assessment which may be made against such a person.

That part which applies to the retail merchant reads :—

"Every person carrying on the business of a retail merchant in cities having a population of over 50,000 for a sum equal to 25 per cent. of the assessed value; in other cities and towns having a population of 10,000 or over for a sum equal to 30 per cent. of the said assessed value; and in all other municipalities for a sum equal to 35 per cent. of the said assessed value."

Another section dealing with department stores reads:—

"Every person carrying on the business of what is known as a departmental store or of a retail merchant dealing in more than five branches of retail trade or business in the same premises or in connected premises where the assessed value of the premises exceeds $20,000; for a sum equal to 50 per cent. of the said assessed value."

"Where the amount of the assessment of any person assessable under this section would under the foregoing provisions be less than $250, he shall be assessed for the sum of $100."

The percentages for other business are: —Distiller, 150 per cent.; brewer, 75 per cent.; wholesale merchant or insurance company, 75 per cent.; manufacturer, 60 per cent.; solicitor, physician, dentist, 50 per cent.; flour miller, producing less than 50 barrels per day, 35 per cent.; photographer, theatre, skating rink, resturant, 25 per cent.

CIVIL SERVICE CO-OPERATION.

First Annual Meeting Held Last Week and Plans Arranged.

Ottawa, May 4.—The first annual meeting of the Civil Service Co-Operative Association was held here last week, the press being excluded. Nine officers were elected, three being for one year, three for two years and three for three years.

It was decided to provide for the opening of a Co-Operative grocery store. No capital stock is to be issued, but the expenses are to be met by debentures. It is planned to distribute the profits made, first by the payment of interest on loans; second, the establishment of a reserve fund; and third, the remainder to be distributed among customers according to the amount of goods purchased.

Another Trade Week.

Hamilton is thinking about having a "trade" week about the end of May.

A BRITISH TRIBUTE.

A British manufacturer, in answering a letter from this office relating to advertising in the Spring Number of The Canadian Grocer, says:

"We are much obliged by esteemed favor of the 5th inst. and in reply we hope to be able to send you some advertisement matter shortly.

"We may state we always keep one of your larger numbers before us, as we consider your paper the very best of its kind that comes into this office, and certainly the most up-to-date."

BAN ON COLORED JAPAN TEA.

Cables from Japan convey the startling intelligence that the government of "the Flowery Kingdom" has passed a law prohibiting the exportation from that country of colored teas.

This legislation is in line with the action taken recently by the United States relating to colored teas, with the exception that in the case of the latter country the prohibition was placed on imports only.

Should this report prove to be correct the effects of this new move by the Mikado's government will be far-reaching in Canada. The bulk of the teas from Japan sold in this country are of the colored variety, and the placing of the ban upon its exportation will be quite a serious matter. The taste of the consumers who have become accustomed to drinking this particular class of tea will have to be diverted to some other line. But it may be that with this curtailment of this source of supply, higher prices will follow in the other grades. The cables contained no explanations.

CO-OPERATIVE DELIVERY.

Capable dealers have always argued in the past that no scheme of centralized delivery could be worked out to satisfaction in a large community. Yet such a proposition is now being tried in the city of St. Thomas, Ont., and so far the results have been most encouraging.

The towns of Goderich, Ingersoll, and Simcoe have also taken up a like method of handling goods and from all of these there comes nothing but praise of the idea.

It would be as perfectly feasible to attempt a general delivery scheme in Winnipeg, Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, or London as it was in St. Thomas. Certainly there could not be one big single system to each city; it would have to be divided up into separate districts; but it could be worked out and would reduce the operating expenses of the average city retailer not a little.

The only fault to be found with the systems mentioned above is that they are not co-operative, but under the direction of a single man. There is no reason why the retailer should not control his own delivery, nor why he should not make a profit out of it.

SARDINES IN CANADA.

Canada is to be represented at the International Fisheries Congress to be opened in Rome, Italy, on May 15, by Prof. E E. Prince, the Commissioner of Fisheries for this country, and it is hoped that results of importance to our fishing industry shall follow upon his visit abroad.

The congress meetings will have special interest for Canada, because there are several great and profitable fisheries being developed along the shores of the Mediterranean Sea that might be introduced into Canada. Included among these is the sardine undustry, which is as yet undeveloped here, althogh it is claimed that there is plenty of raw material. Beaver Harbour in New Brunswick is the only place in Canada where these little fish are put up. This little community will no doubt await with great interest the return of Canada's delegate with the ideas of European experts on the subject.

EATON OR HUDSON BAY.

It is probable that during the next few years the country will have the opportunity of looking on at one of the bitterest business battles since Canada's commercial history began. The opposing forces will be the Hudson Bay Company and the Eaton organization and it would seem that the scene of the war will practically cover the entire land from the east through to Vancouver, B.C.

Events of the past have appeared to indicate such a struggle, and the recent announcement that the Hudson Bay Company intends erecting a splendid new establishment in Calgary following upon the report that Eaton's would build a big department store in the same city only tend to confirm the idea.

Time was when these two gigantic concerns went their way without interfering in the slightest degree the one with the other. But that period has gone by. When John C. Eaton decided to build a big department store in Winnipeg he virtually threw down the gauntlet to the old, old trading company. The men at the head of the Hudson Bay Company told him then, so the story goes, that just as he was invading the west, so they would carry the war to the east. This is now being arranged for. Rumors are afloat that the Eaton Company is looking even beyond the Rocky Mountains and Calgary to Vancouver on the Pacific.

There are many dealers who would appreciate such a war.

TO EXTERMINATE THE FLY.

In dealing with scourges and plagues it would be unwise for any one to forget that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Any one who deliberately neglected to take precautions considered necessary by the authorities, and whose neglect contributed afterwards to the death of other persons could legally be charged with criminal negligence under the law with all the attendant proceedings.

Some day that is the light in which the man or woman who fails to take drastic measures against the common house fly will be viewed. Some day that innocent little, even if annoying, pest, will be feared as is the plague. For it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that the fly is one of the most potent mediums for the spread of disease known to science.

So now that the breeding time of the insect is near let the dealers of this country determine that the war they must wage this year is to be unrelenting in its severity; let them make up their mind to take the ounce of precaution and use the pound of cure. The "ounce of precaution" is to consist of the spreading of chloride of lime, or some equally potent cleanser, on and around all heaps and remains of refuse, in and about the store. And your brother dealers on either side, must do the same if only to follow a good example. The pound of cure lies in the placing of poison pads or "sticky sheets" about the store to trap all those insects which have escaped the destructive breath of the lime during the progress of their creation and breeding. It takes five days for a fly to develop sufficiently to take its place on the ceiling, and walls and counters and goods of your store. Let not a single one become so old.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

Sir Alan Aylesworth, Minister of Justice killed a civil service garnishee bill by remarking that the country would not secure the best returns for its money invested in the civil servant if the latter were allowed to be harassed by a creditor. The minister looks upon the question from the standpoint of the lawyer and does not appreciate the contumely that has been heaped upon the service he defends, because of the unusual security its members enjoy. We wonder what methods the officers of the new co-operative store would adopt should the members just simply neglect to call around and settle up.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, May 4.—With favorable weather conditions, business received something of a new impetus last week, only to be set back again during the early part of this, by reverse conditions. The opening of navigation has helped considerably, especially for shipments to more distant points. But from the trade in general there are no special reports to offer this week. Prices are generally steady and the same may be said regarding supply and demand in the most cases.

The primary market in sugar has shown some weakness of late due to the influence of the European beet market, but locally it is steady, with most of the orders coming in for small lots. Dried fruits are gradually narrowing down in supply and interest is beginning to be divided between the stocks in hand and the prospects of the future market. It is still early, but not for a great many of those who have the first selling of the new fruit.

Sugar.—There is a steady demand for sugar, but retailers are asking only for small quantities. It is a general enquiry and is rather satisfactory to the trade. The local market is well maintained. The primary market has shown an easier tendency owing to a decline in the European situation which was reflected in the western markets.

Nuts.—There is a tendency on the part of some to reduce the price of Tarragonas and Grenoble walnuts. The present demand is easy but at the same time the general crop reports are not of the brightest. The situation is therefore reported unchanged, but still in the instances mentioned there is the tendency to reduce prices and it has actually been done.

Coffee.—This market has been quiet and uneventful. The local situation is colorless and the primary market is reported dull. In a recent report Willett & Gray point to the coffee situation intimating the future strength of the market. CANNED GOODS

Toronto.—Although trade in canned goods is not particularly large, still it is of a steady and satisfactory nature. Tomatoes are prominent, while both canned fruits and salmon are receiving their share of attention. Further imports of tomatoes from United States are reported. One dealer said: "Tomatoes from the States cannot be laid down here to sell for less than present quotations and as the markets on the other side are steady, the bringing in of the supplies from there will not bring any lower prices here."

Winnipeg.—A brisk movement is taking place in canned goods. Stocks held in fruit are of good size, but vegetables, principally tomatoes and peas, which are being brought in in large quantities from the United States, are light. The present duty on tomatoes amounts to about 90 cents per case. New prices are quoted, and in many cases advances will be noticed. The wholesalers anticipate a considerable demand for all kinds of canned goods and syrup as prevailing prices of dried fruits are so exceedingly high.

POINTERS—

Raisins—Firm.

Japan Teas—Firm.

Toronto, May 4.—Trade in general groceries this week is inclined to quietness. The farmers throughout the country are busy with their spring work, which creates a slackness for the merchant. The amount of sugar going out is small and this makes sales look even smaller.

Reports in regard to the damage done to the growing crop of California fruits are somewhat conflicting. The effects of the frost have been much greater in some districts than in others, hence the difficulty in getting at the true situation. Seedless raisins have evidently been quite badly affected, while prunes, peaches and apricots have also suffered, peaches apparently the most.

Canned goods and dried fruits which have both been prominent for some time on account of their scarcity and high prices, continue in their position of strength. Trade in both these lines while fairly large is on a hand to mouth basis, as retailers on account of high prices are purchasing for immediate needs only.

Sugar.—The sugar market this week is quiet and practically unchanged from a ween ago. There has been a slight reaction in European beets but it is not expected to materially affect the general situation. The number of centrals grinding does not decrease so rapidly as predicted, suggesting that the crop may exceed expectations. However dealers believe that the market will maintain its strength. Further news from Cuba is awaited and also further purchasing by refiners.

Willets & Gray's weekly cables gives the receipts at six principal ports of Cuba at 36,000 tons; exports. 28,000; stock, 335,000 tons against 372,000 tons last year. The number of centrals grinding is 114, against 127 last week, 130 in 1910, and 131 in 1909.

The stocks in United States and Cuba together are 530,644 tons against 518,065 last week, and 748,270 tons last year, a decrease of 217,626 tons from last year.

Dried Fruits.—The amount of dried fruit going into retailers' hands just now is fairly large. High prices are no doubt curtailing demand for a number of lines. The situation is about the same as already reported, with prunes and evaporated apples in small supply and evaporated peaches none too plentiful either. The only really low price fruit being offered is figs in bags and tapnets.

Apricots are small in supply with fancy about the only kind being offered and they are at very high prices. Raisins continue firm, both valencias and seeded. One dealer said that packers have advanced prices on California seeded and at present it would cost close on 9 cents to lay 16 oz. packages down here.

Tea.—The news that the Japanese government has prohibited the export of colored teas will likely have some effect on Japan green teas. The market for these teas has been firm for some time in sympathy with the general rise in tea values and this will no doubt strengthen it. The change to uncolored teas will take some time to right itself and the question is, will the consumer take kindly to the uncolored green or will he turn to some other kind of colored tea.

Coffee.—The local situation in coffee shows little change. While the statistical position has looked strong for some time, values have not been inflated as it was expected would be the case. With the sales of valorization coffee over, a change in the attitude of buyers throughout the country was looked for, but has failed so far to materialize. The country, though believed to have light stocks, seems able to hold off and spurns the statistical situation. Many believe that the consuming trade is coming to an extremity that will force them to take supplies and that the result will be a further upward movement. A despatch from New York this week says: "No more crop news was forthcoming; but as a matter of fact, recent estimates are taken with a grain of salt in local circles.

Winnipeg, April 29.—Ideal weather during the last week has assisted in increasing the volume of trade transacted in all grocery lines, in comparison with last year. Everything in this part of the country depends on the condition of the crop, and prospects for a bumper yield were never more encouraging than they are at present. Added to this the opening of navigation on the great lakes, which took place during the week, will be another stimulus and supplies will be able to be brought in at considerably less cost than by an all rail route. This lower cost of transportation has already had an effect on the local sugar market by causing a decline of 5 cents per hundred pounds. No other markets have been affected, but it is expected that they will in the near future.

The coffee situation continues to attract the attention of all the wholesalers. The sale of valorization coffee by the Brazilian government on April 22 which was expected to have had a weakening effect on the market has not done so, owing to the fact that the sale was not advertised publicly and was conducted as a private affair to which jobbers in general were excluded. The entire block was picked up by an American company with large roasting interests. As a result of this transaction the rumours that a coffee trust existed have gained considerable ground, and the Tea and Coffee Journal, a New York publication, in discussing the subject remarks as follows:—"That appearances point very strongly to the existence of a trust for the manipulation of coffee prices can hardly be contradicted. If there is such a trust the proposed investigation by Congress for which data is being secured will be most timely."

Sugar.—A decline of 5 cents per hundred pounds due to the difference between part lake route, and an entire rail route has taken place. This decline is however no criterion of the condition of the market, as the tendency is at present to advance rather than decline. Present quotations are as follows:—

Dried Fruits.—The scarcity of all dried fruits is still felt. The advance in prices of raisins which was expected to come in effect the latter part of last week will not do so till this week. Other prices remain unchanged:—

Tea.—A steady trade continues in all lines of tea, in spite of the fact that the tea months, as they are known, are passed. The demand for package tea continues to increase, and sales are also holding their own.

Beans and Peas.—There is nothing new in the bean and pea market. A steady demand still exists and prices remain unchanged.

Flour.—An active export demand has been in existence during the last few weeks, and still prevails, but the domestic demand which was also exceptionally strong has been rather weaker since active seeding operations have commenced throughout the west. The tone of the market is however very steady and the majority of the mills are running full time, although a few throughout the country have been slacking off a bit. Last week predictions of higher price were made by some millers, but up to date these have not been realized. Net quotations at Winnipeg are: First patents, per sack of 98 lbs., $2.80; seconds, $2.60; strong bakers, $2.05.

Millfeed.—A very satisfactory demand is prevailing for millfeed in view of the season of the year. Pasturage will be available in a few weeks and the concern about the supplies of feed is diminishing, with the result that a reduction in price has taken place. Bran is now quoted at $19.50 per ton, and shorts at $21.50. Oat chop is firm at $25 per ton in sacks, barley at $24, and oats and barley mixed at $25.

Cereals.—The market for rolled oats is firmer than it has been of late, and while no advance has taken place the stronger tone to the market has had a stimulating effect on the trade. Quotations for 80 lbs. sacks are $2; oatmeal is also active and steady at $2.45 to $2.50 per 100 lbs. sack; and cornmeal at $2 per 98 lb. sack.

Fresh Fruit.—The most crop on the fruit market at present is strawberries, which are coming in large quantities from Lonisiana. A decline of 50 cents per 24-pint crate has taken place during the week and present quotations are $3. Reports of good crops have been received from Arkansas, Hood River, and Missouri, and in spite of the fact that the market is generally a very unsettled one present indications favor lower prices.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, B.C., May 4.—The potato market on the coast is an interesting feature of the trade. For some time past they have been scarce, and this week a carload arrived all the way from New Brunswick. It is a long distance to bring potatoes but the demand warrants it. At the same time, the first new potatoes are in from California, though they will not be a factor for a few weeks.

A week or two ago it was declared that there was not a surplus potato on the lower mainland, when, lo and behold, some of the farmers south of the Fraser River came in with a few loads which they had cached away for just such a time as this when the supply is short and prices high. One man sold at $40 a ton, while another refused $42.50 per ton.

Commission men are on the ground early in the Ashcroft district. There the farmer is starting to get busy to put in his crop, and the buyers are eager to make arrangements for the harvest. They are offering $15 per ton, delivery at the car. The farmer does not like the small price, as he keeps an eye on the conditions as they are now, but with 16 tons to the acre the profit to him looks good.

A feature of the market in eggs was the importation of a carload from Ontario. They are quoted wholesale at 28 cents, with locals at 30 cents.

A slight reduction is noticed in bacon, and there has also been a drop in Ogilvie's strong bakers' flour, though all other brands remain the same.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B. May 3. — Advances were recorded in cornmeal and oatmeal last week, and American clear pork declined 50 cents. Case eggs are now quoted at 19 cents, and hennery at 22 cents.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, May 4.—Business conditions are reported good all round, and the shipments of groceries to the outports are quite large. These are increasing in volume each week, and collections are considered quite satisfactory. Green goods are coming on the market in small quantities, and the receipts of Bermuda onions are increasing. These southern grown onions are in fine condition, and dealers report that the demand for them is improving each season. There is quite a brisk demand for canned fruits and vegetables, and the sales of the latter will increase from now on as stocks of winter vegetables are about cleaned up.

"Potatoes will be one dollar per bushel before long," said a dealer this week.

Eggs continue in light demand, with receipts fairly heavy. Jobbers cannot understand the egg market.

The receipts of fruit are large and the demand is better.

Eggs are Steady; Butter Little Easier

Butter Receipts Larger—Market Weaker—Eggs Maintain Their Position—A Good Steady Demand—No Surplus of Supplies—Cheese Not Particularly Brisk—English Bacon Market Easier—Reflected on Canadian Markets to Some Extent—United States Hog Prices a Shade Weaker.

A weaker feeling has prevailed in the London market for Canadian bacon for the past week, and prices have declined 1s to 2s, the range now being 50s to 58s. This has been reflected to a certain extent upon Canadian markets and live hogs in Toronto are down 15 cents, but Montreal shows no change. American markets are also a shade easier this week as heavy hog shipments are expected from Western States.

The egg market is marking time and is if anything a shade firmer this week at most centres. There is no surplus of eggs as was hinted would be the case. Cold storage is apparently taking care of all surplus supplies throughout the country. One dealer said: "There is an enormous amount of eggs being shipped to the north country from many points in Ontario, so that it is only the surplus stocks that find their way to the Toronto and Montreal markets." A shipment of eggs was recently made from Ontario to British Columbia.

The farmer's wife and butter factory combined have increased supplies of butter on the various market and weakness in prices is the result. In some markets reductions have been made, while at others only a weaker feeling is discernible. Demand for this line is fairly active.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The decline in prices last week has influenced business considerably, and the demand has been a little more active. Grocers and butchers have practically exhausted the extra supplies secured for Easter trade. Packers are reported to be demanding supplies just now and the primary market shows some new activity.

Butter.—The trade are looking for a heavier production of butter than usual this year. Owing to the present production being large the market is inclined to weakness.

Eggs.—Supplies of eggs continue to come forward freely. The demand is steady and active with the result that the market is in a rather strong position. TORONTO.

Provisions.—A lower English market for Canadian bacon has brought about a reduction of 15 cents in live hog prices this week, bringing them down to a $6 basis as compared with $6.90 on March 1st, and of $8.75 on May 3rd last. This puts a little easier feeling in the provision market in general, but there are no price changes this week, except plain and peameal backs which are down ½ cent. Trade is quite satisfactory in volume.

Butter.—Under increased supply, butter prices have again been reduced, and fresh creamery prints are offered at 25 to 26 cents and dairy prints at 20 to 21 cents. Eggs.—Eggs are holding their own and are decidedly steady at present quotations. There has been no big accumulation of supplies and with a good demand the present situation has been brought about. A good trade throughout the country and the fact that eggs are being stored at many points, is blamed for the curtailment of supplies.

Using Up Waste Products of the Ripe Pineapple

As the pineapple season is now approaching, the following information may be of value to the dealer in making sales. It should enable him to show customers the full value of this fruit:

"Not every woman who appreciates the pineapple at its full value realizes that she is wasting a goodly portion of the fruit when she throws away the cores and peelings. These, however, chopped fine and cooked to extract the juice, yield a goodly amount of flavor excellent as a foundation for sauces, sherbets and even for jellies.

"Again, not every woman who realizes this knows how to care for the juice of the solitary pines she uses throughout the season, since one alone would be insufficient for any of the purposes mentioned; or if more, there may be no incentive to use the usually discarded portions at the time.

"Whenever a pineapple is used then, whether one or a dozen, chop fine the peeling (which should first be well washed), eyes and core, and simmer slowly in water enough to cover. When every particle of flavor is extracted, strain it, add sugar to taste and heat again, sealing in cans exactly as you would a fruit. One pineapple core and peeling will fill a pint can with juice of sufficiently full flavor to serve as the foundation for a delicious sherbet; or it may be still further reduced, making it strong enough for other purposes.

"This canned juice, too, may be saved until apples are in market, when combined with apples a delightful jelly will result. The otherwise discarded portions of three pineapples will provide a daintily flavored jelly, which will be a revelation to the housekeeper who tries it for the first time."

MORE CO-OPERATION.

United Stores Association is Now Formed in New York City.

New York, May 4.—The United Stores Association, which has recently increased its capitalization to $1,000,000 will try, it appears, to introduce in this country the co-operative movement along the same lines as that in England. The proposed plans of the association are stated as follows: "The object of the association is to enable all the responsible retailers in New York to buy together, advertise together, deliver together, with a view of reducing the cost of doing business; thus enabling them to turn over to their customers a certain percentage of the saving thus effected. There will be 17 lines of trade identified with the organization.

This is the first time real co-operation has been attempted on an extensive scale in the United States in a large city. There are over 1,900 successful co-operative societies in this country, but they are all in the smaller towns, cities and localities. The object of this company is to introduce co-operation idealized in all the large cities, and it is anticipated that within the next six months Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul and other cities will incorporate subsidiary companies of the United Stores Association for the purpose of putting the same plan into effect there.

The officers of the association say this will enable the retailers of New York to return to their customers at least $6,000,000 in cash the first year.

Flour is Steady Under Higher Wheat

Wheat Market Higher This Week—World's Shipments 1,000,000 Bushels Less Last Week—Visible Supply in Canada and States Smaller—Crop Situation in America Continues Excellent—Flour Trade is Steady—Oat Market Uncertain—Corn Steady.

The flour and cereal markets are rather featureless. There are no price changes to record. Flour is steady with a stronger wheat market but trade is not particularly brisk, being of a hand-to-mouth nature in most cases.

There is a stronger feeling in the wheat market. On the whole, the trade paid little attention to the rain which fell over the winter crop country at the first of the week. Some of the feeling of strength came from the fact that the world's shipments were 1,000,000 bushels less than for the previous week, and for the corresponding time a year ago. Then, too, the visible supply of both the United States and Canada showed a falling off.

Against this, the crop situation in America continues excellent and above normal, however, and some dealers believe that the present upward movement is not altogether warranted.

The rolled oats market is steady at present at last week's advances, but the oat market is rather uncertain.

Corn is strong and as a result cornmeal continues steady.

The World's wheat shipments last week amounted to 11,088,000 bushels, compared with 12,016,000 bushels the previous week and 12,080,000 last year.

TORONTO.

Flour.—The wheat market has recovered from the easier feeling felt the middle of last week, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba is quoted at 99½ cents. The flour trade is not particularly brisk, for while the city trade keeps of a steady nature, supplies in the country are being purchased only in limited quantities. Ontario wheat has been exhibiting strength with quotations as high as 86 cents, due to the limited offerings. As a result, Ontario flour shows a steadier feeling than has been noticeable for some time back.

Cereals—No price changes are reported in cereals. The oat market is fairly steady, but if anything, shows a slightly downward tendency. NEWS NOTES FROM LONDON.

Items of Interest to All in and About the Forest City.

London, Ont., May 4.—R. J. Donaghy, for the past twenty years with T. A. Rowat & Co., is severing his connection with that firm to go into the brokerage business in this city.

"Dick" started in from school with T. A. Rowat to learn the business and he climbed the ladder till he was given an interest in the business.

He has been one of the hardest workers in the Retail Grocers' Association, being a member of the executive for the past five years. He always gave his opinions on matters of importance to the trade and they carried weight because "Dick" was a good debater. He was also somewhat of a ball player and for two seasons played for the Grocers' Baseball team.

One of the best ad. writers in the city, he always wrote attractive, interesting advertisements for his firm. Many copies of his ads. have appeared in The Grocer from time to time and they were a credit to him. "Dick" will be greatly missed by the members of the association. They all join in wishing him success in his new undertaking.

F. C. Toon, one of London's oldest and most respected grocers, has the sympthy of his fellow grocers in the great loss he has sustained by the death of his wife.

Wm. Ferguson, who died here last week, was the first president of the old Grocers' Association that was organized here about twenty years ago. He was a bosom friend of the late Andrew McCormick whose four sons carry on one of the largest grocery businesses in the city.

TALK ON THE OLIVE.

Vancouver Dealers Appreciate Talk by Californian.

Vancouver, B.C., May 4.—The members of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association at their last meeting had the opportunity of listening to a short address on "The Olive," delivered by J. C. Kubias, of Redlands, California. That the information imparted aroused considerable interest was evidenced by the questioning after the conclusion of the address, and the president, Mr. Clark, expressed the wish, that since this had been so instructive he hoped a speaker could be had for every meeting to take up some subject.

Some of the members were of the opinion that it was a mistake to offer $10 as a prize, in order to attract members to the meetings. It was decided though, that the scheme was a successful one, but the amount was reduced to $5, and every member of the association is to have a draw for it. If the winner is not present, the money will revert to the association.

The association will hold its annual convention during exhibition week, with a grand picnic on July 1st at the exhibition grounds. This annual picnic is a general re-union of the members of the association and their families.

CHRISTIE

"Christie Biscuits Sell More Than Biscuits"

That's the slogan of reputable grocers from one end of Canada to the other. And reasonably:—Because if you sell her ladyship the best biscuits on the market—the best biscuits she wants—it's more than likely that she'll become a tea and coffee customer, too.

The reasons underlying the known superiority of Christie biscuits are not hard to understand. In the first place the big biscuit makers only manufacture biscuits. They have no side lines to distract their attention. All their knowledge of the baking business is concentrated in the making of better biscuits.

Then every ounce of raw material is of high grade table quality—the best money can buy.

But the real cause of success—the cause of the biggest, brightest and cleanest factory in all Canada lies in the Christie ideals. Navel Oranges are Higher in Price

Good Shippers Are Scarcer—Season is Drawing to a Close—Florida Tomatoes Are Higher—Grapefruit is Firm—Bananas Enjoying a Good Trade—Rain and Cold Affect Trade Somewhat—Strawberries Are Lower in Price—Egyptian Onions Are Easier.

Trade in fruits and vegetables at most centres has been satisfactory of late, but the cold snap this week has had a slightly depressing effect on the trade.

California navels are steadier in price, good shippers being scarcer of late, and therefore bringing higher prices. The season of the navel orange is drawing to a close. Valencias will be ready in a short time and a big crop is expected this year. The shipment of California oranges has been large this year. Up to April 17, 20,471 cars had been sent out of Southern California, compared with 13,888 cars up to the same time last year.

The offerings of Florida tomatoes are extremely small and as pointed out before prices are ruling higher. Rain on the east coast of Florida has further curtailed shipments, but some will be sent out from the western coast at the end of this week.

Pineapples have not yet reached a low enough price to create a heavy demand. Cuban pines will be ready about the middle of the month. The crop is expected to be about the same as last year, perhaps a little smaller. Prospects point to good quality stocks.

The first steamer with Sicilian and Italian lemons is expected in Montreal this week. There is a good steady demand for this article at present and prices continue steady.

A fair demand is being felt for grapefruit and prices point upward. Very light supplies of grapefruit remain in Florida and a strong market is looked for during the remainder of the season.

The big scarcity of potatoes still continues in the west. Shipments from the east are being forwarded, curtailing the supplies that would otherwise be sent to the Toronto and Montreal markets. A car load of New Brunswick potatoes was recently received in Vancouver, B.C.

Vegetables.—Tomatoes are dearer owing to conditions in the south that were referred to in a previous issue. Florida tomatoes are pretty well cleaned up. Demand was beginning to waken up, but the limited supply and the existing price has been too much of an obstacle. The demand for imported vegetables is not as good as it might be. With increased receipts the consumption will likely show an improvement.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—The first steamer with Sicilian and Italian lemons is expected in Montreal this week. Already there has been an improvement in the lemon demand and prices are beginning to show a tendency towards a new strength. A prolonged warm wave will prove beneficial. Monday's rain caused a break in what was proving a rather steady run of summer weather. Stocks are reported below the average locally for the beginning of the season. Navel oranges are nearing the end and are gradually becoming exhausted. Prices have been advanced on the navel kind recently and the demand is beginning to be supplied with late valencias.

Bananas are coming in freely and are meeting a good demand. Prices are quoted lower than usual Grapefruit is in good request. Strawberries are also being received more liberally and the price is down. Receipts average about four car loads or more a week. North Carolina is still providing this fruit.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The steadier feeling which has been noticeable in navel oranges has resulted in a further stiffening in prices this week. Tomatoes, as previously pointed out, are also higher this week. Apples are getting into extremely small supply and prices rule firm. Bananas are enjoying an excellent trade. Rhubarb which is imported from Baltimore is very scarce and prices continue high. Pineapples are quoted a little lower this week, but some firms are asking $4.50 for repacked stock. Grapefruit is firm; strawberries are lower, but the trade is not extra large as yet.

Vegetables.—Old cabbage is easier this week and is quoted at $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, while Floridas have also a lower tendency. Cucumbers are offered in hampers at $3 to $3.25, and Boston by the dozen at $1.50. Both wax and green beans are easier under larger offerings at $3 to $3.50. The amount of Spanish onions offered is not large and as high as $4 per case is being asked. Egyptian onions are easier and prices seem likely to be reduced. Some Canadian asparagus is offered on the market this week at $1 to $1.50 per dozen. The potato situation is about the same, and supplies are affected by the heavy demand from the west where there is a big scarcity.

AT LONDON CANADIAN CLUB.

William Maxwell's Tour Through Western Ontario.

London Ont., May 4.—William Maxwell, president of the International Co-Operative Alliance, was a London visitor on Saturday, and addressed the Canadian Club. This week, he spoke in Chatham, St. Thomas, Brantford and Preston.

Mr. Maxwell told the London Canadian Club that there were many benefits outside the trade to those who are included in the societies. Material aid is given the members when they need it, in the shape of loans to buy homes and provision that they may enjoy comfort in old age.

Another feature is educational. The members are instructed in useful subjects. Last year, in Great Britain, £88,000, he said, were expended in educational work, and £57,000 in charity. Farms have been established for fruit-growing in England, and some of the produce is made into jam.

In Ceylon, the societies own four tea estates, and still another feature of the work was declared to be the chance given to sick workmen to spend a week or so at convalescent Homes.

Millers Amalgamate.

Another large flour merger has been completed by the consolidation of the Canadian Cereal and Milling Co., and the International Milling Co., of Saskatchewan and Minnesota.

Fish - Oysters

The Supply of Fresh Fish is Heavier

Receipts Are Larger—Slight Decline in Some Lines—Demand is Largely for the Fresh Variety—Fresh Salmon is Worth 70 Cents per Pound at Halifax—Good Season in Smelts on Nova Scotian Coast—Halibut and Smelts Not Plentiful in British Columbia.

The market shows a number of changes this week, in supply and consequently in price. Demand is largely for fresh fish and in some lines receipts have been heavier with prices showing a slight decline. Halibut, haddock and cod are quoted slightly lower due to more liberal shipments. Haddock are arriving in two qualities, one a fancy shore bringing a little higher price. Shad show an opposite condition. They have been somewhat scarcer and as a result show a rather sharp advance. Several new lines are noted this week shad herring, dressed perch and bullheads being among the list. Pike are in good supply and are easier in price. There is a fair demand for these lines with shad receiving a good share.

The demand for frozen and salted fish is maintained. They have been unaffected by the mild weather as far as quality is concerned.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—The fish market holds considerable of the activity it enjoyed some weeks ago. The demand has fallen off to some extent, but there is still a fair business reported. During the past week prices on fresh halibut, haddock, cod and pike have been reduced owing to increased receipts, but shad have been much heavier for the reason that supplies have been noticeably lighter. Oysters are still arriving regularly and with the demand still fair. The market has been holding on and is in a good condition considering the time of the year.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—The vessels of the local banking fleet that arrived this week brought in fairly good catches of fresh fish—cod, halibut and haddock. Halibut is plentiful, but the price holds firm. The catches of cod and haddock are not as large as usual at this season.

Dealers report smoked fish in good demand, there being a market for all the stock that can be cured. The exports of smoked haddock to the American and upper Canadian markets are quite heavy, and the sales of bloaters are also large.

The smelt fishermen had a very prosperous season, and this industry is growing throughout the province. These fish are packed in small boxes, frozen, and then shipped, the majority going to the Boston and New York markets.

There is not much change locally in the lobster situation. With the prevailing high prices the demand is light and the supply is ample to go around. Some of the fishermen along the coast have sustained serious loss by damage to their lobster gear, principally by floating ice. Most of the lobster factories are in operation, but their receipts are below the average. With improved weather conditions, however, they hope to bring up the pack.

There is practically nothing doing in the salt fish markets. Local prices for salt cod continue firm. Mackerel are off the market, and there is not much demand for pickled herring. Fresh herring are on the market in small quantities, and it is expected that mackerel will be along in the course of a few weeks. The supply of salt fish for export is limited.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Trade in fish is of a steady nature turning more to the fresh caught variety which are in fairly plentiful supply at present and of excellent quality. Reductions this week are made in fresh caught perch, trout, white fish and herrings.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Fishing schooners from Freeport, Westport and Brier Island reached here last week and while they usually bring 20 to 50 quintals each of dry fish, this time they had none at all. The spring has been particularly backward, there is no bait and the majority of the fishermen are idle. Grand Manan is practically destitute of fish. A few sardines have been taken off Campobello. The local markets which have been short for several weeks past were particularly low last week. The supply consists of cod, a few haddock, halibut, a few salmon and shad, with the usual smoked fish. There are a few dry medium cod, quoted at $6.50 per quintal and smoked gaspereaux, bloaters and kippers, at 2 cents each, but no smoked herring.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver.—Halibut are not as plentiful this year as last, the small catches still continuing. The Manhattan brought in 130,000 pounds and the Kingfisher 200,000, all of which were from Alaskan waters. The supply is not anywhere near the demand, and at least one Canadian fishing company has had to purchase fish in Seattle. A. L. Hagar, the manager, declares that they pay about 6 cents per pound for them, and while that price is obtained locally, fish dealers back east will not pay more than four and a half cents. Even then they ask for a discount. That seems to be the height of the market in the east, and no explanation can be made to satisfy dealers that a higher price should be charged.

Fine spring salmon are being brought in, but the quantity is not large. Ten cents per pound is the price.

The smaller fish, such as smelts, are also scarcer than usual, erhaps because the demand is constantly growing larger.

OPPOSE EARLY CLOSING.

St. Thomas Council Asks Verification of Names on Petition.

St. Thomas, May 4.—The early closing movement among St. Thomas merchants is hung up for the present by the action of No. 4 committee of the city council in passing a resolution requiring verification of the signatures on the petition presented, and a computation to see if the necessary seventy-five per cent. were represented. There was also an opposing element at the committee meeting in the person of several merchants who claimed that to shut up shop at 7 o'clock would seriously injure their trade, which was largely with railwaymen and mechanics.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—Cheese Values

Some Pertinent Facts Relating to Experiments Made to Prove the Great Food Properties of This So-Called Indigestible Article —The Different Makes—Why "Stiltons" Should be two Years' Old—The "Roquefort" and its National Grotto—Italian Swiss and Dutch Products.

There seems to be a mistaken idea in the minds of great many people that cheese is an indigestible article of food.

It is policy for the grocer to convince these folk that it is not, and also to use this and other information in such a manner as to bring about an increased trade in this line.

Recent experiments have shown that a pound of cheese has nearly the same food value as two pounds of fresh beef, or of any other fresh meat. It is worth as much or more than a pound of ham, and is more digestible, and is equal to two pounds of eggs and three pounds of fish. With this information the grocer should, indeed, be able to boom the sale of cheese. It is also shown that there is little or no difference in the comparative digestibility of cheese at different stages of ripening. Experiments have shown that the green curd is apparently as digestible, and so far as nutritive value was concerned, as good a food as the cheese at any stage of ripening.

The Makes of Cheese.

There are many different makes of cheese. Some of those in which the grocer may be interested are described here.

Most dealers are well acquainted with the Canadian cheese both when green and mature.

Stilton cheese is a rich white and solid cheese that is imported from England. It is made of new milk with added cream. The cheeses are made of all sizes, although the average is about 16 pounds, and in form are generally twice as high as they are broad. They are not considered sufficiently ripe and mellow for cutting until two years' old at least. On the renneting of the milk and the amount of acidity retained depends the peculiar excellence of Stilton. It is said that the Stilton when ripe should be kept in a cool, damp cellar and never under any circumstance be left in a draught, as the cheese is very liable to crack and dry.

One of the French.

Roquefort is considered one of the richest and best French kinds. It is said to have been made by the same process for over 2,000 years in the little village of Roquefort, in the South of France. It is made from sheep's and goats' milk and is of a pale white color. It somewhat resembles "Stilton" but is hardly as rich and possesses a peculiar flavor. It is not upon the milk or of the preparation but upon the unique method of curing that the character of the cheese is thought to depend. They come in sizes from four to six pounds, are about 8 inches high and 4 inches wide. The cheese is stored in the national grottoes of the Valsassina, which are damp and form an immense cave—a perfect cheese citadel—in the limestone rock at Roquefort. These caves probably impart to the cheese its unchanging character.

An Italian Make.

Gorgonzola is a very rich Italian cheese made in weights of about 16 pounds. It is somewhat like ripe Stilton in quality, though differing in shape and size. The mixing of the curds of the morning's and evening's milk is said to be the cause of the peculiarity of Gorgonzola cheese. The two curds of morning and evening milk, one cold and one warm, never thoroughly amalgamate and it is in the cracks thus left that the blue mould grows as the cheese ripens. Being brittle and easily broken, great care should be taken in removing them from packages. They should be kept cool but never in a draught, nor should they be allowed to freeze, and they should be cut with a wire.

From Old Holland.

Dutch cheese is a small, hard, salty variety, made in Holland, muriatic acid being used instead of rennet acid, as is usual. They are good keepers, Edam being one of the popular makes. The northern part of Holland is the seat of the industry, and the consequent cleanliness of the relish is therefore doubly assured. The ripening process lasts from two to three months, the round balls growing the fine yellow or reddish color peculiar to Edam cheese.

Swiss Cheese.

Swiss cheese is remarkable for its peculiar flavor. It is quite firm and dry, is of a yellowish color and is filled with numerous cavities or cells which are due to the chemical action of the whey, the sugar contained becoming during the ripening, converted into alcohol and carbonic acid, which by its expansion, while escaping, produces these cavities, so peculiar to this cheese.

"Crown Brand" CORN SYRUP

made an extensive increase last year. This increase was due to three causes:

FIRST, Extensive advertising—the bill-boards from coast to coast are telling the people about "Crown Brand."

SECOND, the quality of "Crown Brand"—the user who once tries it comes back for more.

THIRD, (and by no means least important) the grocer's margin of profit in "Crown Brand" is all it should be.

Your individual sales should have been more. Were they? Let people know you're selling "Crown Brand" Corn Syrup; GET YOUR SHARE.

Doubt Is The Forerunner of Disaster!

A safe and known rule to follow in whist is also a safe rule to follow in business, namely, "When in doubt, play your trump card." Each of the listed brands below is a safe trump card to play!

A Great Selling Team

¶ Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

¶ They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action—to closing.

¶ Good salesmen and good trade-paper advertising make a great team to carry the buyer through these several stages to the buying point. Alone, the salesman is at a disadvantage.

Here's a simple little thing one grocer did that brought him three days of splendid date sales.

Royal Commission on Internal Trade

H. C. Beckett, of Hamilton, Thinks Appointment of Permanent Body, Similar to Railway Board, Would Solve Troubles Between Manufacturers, Wholesalers and Retailers—Believes a Commission to Inquire Into Alleged Discriminations of Present Equalized Rate System Would Not Bring About Change—Says Present System Not Understood.

Some time ago a rumor to the effect that several dealers in a town in Eastern Ontario were going to inaugurate a movement intended to do away with the equalized rate system on sugar, reached this office. Following this, there came the word that an application would soon be made for a Royal commission to investigate the whole matter and to probe into certain alleged discriminations against certain towns. Back and forth vexatious stories floated, and The Grocer finally determined to find out, if possible, just what those who are familiar with the working of the equalized rate book are thinking in regard to all this.

The answer is given here, in the shape of a letter from H. C. Beckett, of Hamilton. It is, of course, the opinion of but one man, and yet, as Mr. Beckett is generally acknowledged to be an authority on the subject in hand, it is to be supposed that there will be few wholesalers who will be found to disagree with him.

Worth Careful Thought.

Time will not be lost which the retailer gives over to a careful perusal of this letter. It states clearly the position taken by a man who ought to be, and no doubt is, in close touch with the wholesalers' side of the case. It will be noted that Mr. Beckett does not view with favor the appointment of a transient committee, but would welcome with open arms the appointing by the Government at Ottawa of a Royal commission on internal trade and commerce. He desires to have this body of men as strong, individually and collectively, as is the Railway Board of Canada. He feels that with such a board in constant session there would be much less cause for distrust between wholesale and retailer.

Hamilton, May 3rd, 1911.

Editor Canadian Grocer:

"I have your letter of 2nd. asking if the trade had a meeting in Toronto last week to discuss the equalized rates on sugar, and also asking for the views I hold regarding the equalized sugar rates.

"In reply, beg to state that there has been no meeting of the trade to discuss equalized sugar rates; you have evidently been misinformed.

"The equalized rates system is so little understood by those outside the trade that many erroneous ideas prevail and many absurd statements have been made regarding it.

System Complicated.

"It would be impossible to intelligently and briefly explain the equalized rates system in a communication. While simple to those who understand it, the system is necessarily complicated and difficult of explanation.

"It has been in operation now for thirteen years and (with the exception of a few kickers who do not understand has proved to be the most satisfactory solution of a very difficult problem. So far as its being fair to the retail trade and to the consumer, it is more than fair.

"Not very long ago the system was investigated by the courts, and as a result of that enquiry the court found as follows:—

"There was some complaint about the system known as 'equalized rates,' it being contended that it bore unequally and oppressively as against certain towns or districts. This statement was entirely disproved and it was shown that the equalization was based strictly upon the freight rates of the different railways."

Cheaper to Retailer.

"In further explanation beg to say that the equalized rates are based upon the railway and boat freight rates, and under the system sugar in many cases is laid down cheaper to the retailer and consumer than would be the case if no equalized rates were in force. Under this system the difference in cost to the retail merchants and consumers throughout the country is much less than before the system was adopted by the refiners.

"The impression prevails in some minds that the wholesale grocers control the equalized rates. For the information of your readers beg to say the equalized rates are fixed by the refiners and the basis upon which they are fixed is governed by the prevailing freight rates.

"You ask if I think the appointment of a commission to investigate the equalized rates system would result in a reduction of the rates to certain points. In reply beg to say that I am satisfied the investigation on the part of a commission into the equalized rates system would not in any way change the rates.

Commission, Trade and Commerce.

"So far as the appointment of a commission is concerned, the wholesale grocers have advocated that to the Government for some time. What this country needs, and needs badly, is a permanent Royal commission of internal trade and commerce, and the wonder is that its appointment has not been made years ago. Many wrong impressions prevail in the minds of people all over the country as to the conditions that govern various lines of trade. Now, a bureau of information, such as a commission of internal trade and commerce would be, would be of inestimable value to this country. It seems to me a crime that we should go year after year without any steps being taken on the part of the Government to properly inform themselves as to the real conditions of trade in this country.

Like Railway Board.

"When I speak of a commission, I do not mean a political machine. (Heaven save us from that.) I mean a commission composed of men of undoubted ability and business experience—a commission absolutely removed from politics — a commission something after the style of the Railway Board of Canada. Any one in business must know what an absolutely fair tribunal that is, and what great protection it has offered to the public as well as the railway corporations. For years a commission of internal trade and commerce has been advocated to the government, but no action has been taken.

Could Post Government.

"With such a commission, if there was a complaint regarding the methods and conduct of any line of trade, this commission could take it up and make its report. Such a commission could post the government on conditions of trade about which at present the government are absolutely in the dark. The appointment of such a commission would do away with the rank injustice that has been meted out to many of the business men of this country. As an illustration—the expenditure of over $8,000 on the part of the government in trying to convict the wholesaler grocers of a criminal charge of which they are not guilty, and the necessary expense on the part of the wholesale grocers of over $12,000, in defending themselves against this trumped up charge. With a commission such as I have suggested—a permanent institution in this country—no such injustice would be done any one; on the contrary, conditions would be thoroughly investigated and a proper and correct knowledge obtained that would finally result in great benefit to the entire business community of this country.

H. C. Beckett."

This is, as has already been said, but one side of the question. There always is another side. This is not written to invite individual grievances, but The Grocer would like to know just what retailers throughout the country are thinking in regard to the appointment of a Royal commission on internal trade and commerce, applied to the equalization rates on sugar.

How Are You Going to Figure Profits?

Treasurer of Clarksburg Board of Trade and F. C. Williams, of Ridgeville, Contribute Ideas of How This Department Should be Conducted—Former in Favor of Estimating From Sales, and Latter Stands Strongly for Working on the Cost.

When Henry Johnson, Jr., some time ago wrote an article setting forth at length the argument that the proper method to figure profit was from the sales and not the cost, he little reckoned what a storm of ideas and divergent views he was going to stir out.

Readers of The Grocer will, no doubt remember that the first man to cross swords with Mr. Johnson on the matter was C. E. Jamieson, of St. Catharines, the head of the Commercial Department of the St. Catharines Collegiate. Subsequently John Halloway, of Toronto, contributed a short article in support of figuring from sales. Only last week there was another article from Mr. Jamieson. Now here are two more. As Mr. Jamieson said last week, that he would not like to see this controversy stop until the point had been satisfactorily explained, it almost looks as if his wish is to be granted.

J. M. Steele's Letter.

Below is given first the letter from J. M. Steel, a merchant of Clarksburg, Ont., and treasurer of the Board of Trade of that place. His views incline to the selling end.

Editor Canadian Grocer :—

"I have been quite interested in the discussions going on in The Canadian Grocer about percentage. I agree with the views of both Henry Johnson, jr., and also J. F. Holloway, that the proper way is to calculate the percentage of profit on the amount realized in the sale.

"It is quite clear to my mind that if I sell an article that costs me 80 cents, for $1 I have made a profit on that dollar of 20 per cent. That is 20 cents profit and 80 cents for the cost of the article. True I have added a profit of 25 per cent. on the cost, but that, in my opinion, is the wrong way to figure it. Consider the large variety and different percentages of profit, on the many articles sold in a day in a store. It seems to me the only sane and safe way is to calculate your percentage of profit by deduction.

Less Cutting of Prices.

"Let me add in conclusion that if more merchants and grocers studied their percentages there would be less cutting and slashing of prices, less reductions of small amounts when making sales and business would be healthier and better. Very few look to the pleasure there is in doing business when properly conducted."

An Idea From Ridgeville.

Mr. Williams' letter which follows, shows decidedly that he is on the other side of the fence. The cost system appeals to him as the safest way. His letter in full as follows :

Editor Canadian Grocer :—

I firmly believe a merchant should figure his stock on hand at cost price instead of selling price. In all things he should aim not to deceive himself or make himself think his profits are larger than is actually the case. If anything he should under-rate, rather than over-rate.

Full Face Value.

Of course one of the first things to do is to make out a statement of the liabilities. Needless to say, these should be put in for full face value and none of these should be omitted. In paying them, there will be no reductions, and they must go in at par.

Be Conservative.

Next there are the assets, a most conservative course should be followed in valuing them. I have remarked that the stock of merchandise should be put in at cost price—well, the greatest care should be taken to include only the good and salable stock. Anything that is damaged, deteriorated or of which selling value has been impaired should be written off or written down liberally.

Show Actual Liabilities.

The business should be done in such a manner that when the balance sheet is made it will show the liabilities as they are, and the assets at a conservative valuation. The merchant should remember that he will not lose the values he writes off. He merely postpones the time when they will appear in his surplus account.

In Bookkeeping.

Then in the matter of bookkeeping from day to day, great care shauld be taken to charge all the expense accounts that should be charged to them, what I mean is that business men sometimes charge items to capital, that might more properly be charged to expense account.

In Charging.

Take the store fittings for example. It is conservative finance for the merchant to charge the smaller items, that are not of a permanent value, to expense account while the larger items which will last a number of years, might, and with reason be charged to property or capital account. But even in this case it is desirable that at the end of each year a certain proportion of the cash be written off—charged to expense account, and credited to property account. So that when they are thrown aside they will have been written off the books entirely.

Valuing Book Accounts.

In valuing the book accounts and bills receivable, they should be taken in a pessimistic manner when there is a considerable element of doubt as to their payment. They should be written down liberally, and afterwards when an account so written down is paid in full, it would be a good idea to put the surplus amount collected over and above the amount at which the account was carried on the books into a reserve account designed to meet future losses from bad accounts.

No Reason Why.

In this way, I see no reason why a merchant should not have in his balance sheet a very concise and accurate statement, showing the profits as they actually existed in the business.

Yours very truly,

F. C. WILLIAMS.

Ridgeville, Ont.

There are, no doubt, many more dealers throughout the country, with definite opinions on this subject. Would it not be as well, as Mr. Jamieson says, to finish it when we are at it ? There must be a few points held as of vital importance to many that have not as yet been touched. Why not send them in and end it all ?

APPOINT COMMITTEE

To Investigate Financial Statement of Toronto Branch R.M.A.

Toronto, May 11.—At a special meeting of the executive of the local branch of Retail Merchants' Association last week, a series of recommendations to the Dominion Board, urging changes in the constitution were passed.

The resignations of vice-presidents Harry Ellis and George H. Cooper were accepted, and D. B. Jacques and J. B. Dunlop were elected in their stead, Mr. Jacques occupying the first, and Mr. Dunlop the second chair. The resignations of all the other officers were laid on the table also, but on motion they were requested to take them up, and remain in office during the year.

The gathering was not as large as the one held a little more than a week before, nor was it as stormy. It had been called for the purpose of receiving the recommendations of their executive officers, as comprising their opinions of what was best for the Toronto branch as a whole.

Practically all of these recommendations the meeting adopted. One of those not accepted called for the providing of new officers for the branch independent of those of the general secretary. Among those endorsed by the meeting, and which will be forwarded to the Dominion Board, with the approval of the branch, was one giving the local branch power to set its own membership fee, and also to cut down the per capita tax going from the branch funds to the Provincial and Dominion boards from $3.50 to $1. Another was calculated to give local branches power over all printing matter, with the exception of official matter. Still another was intended to prevent the general secretary from giving out information pertaining to local affairs to the press without his first securing the permission of the executive officers of the branch.

E. M. Trowern, objecting strenuously to the financial report as presented by local secretary George E. Gibbard, it was decided to have a committee go into the report and see exactly how the affairs of the branch stand. Neither Chairman Dockery or Secretary Gibbard had any objection to offer to this.

Auto Delivery Yields More Efficiency

Big Dealer Changes From the Horse and Wagon System and Believes He is Doing the Correct Thing—Thinks Better Delivery Will Carry Business Steadily Upward to Greater Achievement—Actual Comparison as to Original Cost and Running Expenses.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

This automobile business has been on my mind for the past five years. All that time it seemed to me that I could "see it coming." I have held back until convinced that the machines had been perfected to the point of being practical, business propositions.

I was tempted in 1905 by an electric machine, which I was mighty glad afterwards that I did not buy. Later I nearly bought a regular, pneumatic tired runabout with convertible body; but I could not see where any loading capacity had been provided, so concluded to wait. The radiator feature has also been bad, since in our region it is not uncommon to have the thermometer go to "twenty below" and worse, and I feared the trouble could not possibly be avoided with any water, or water-alcohol, radiator.

Horses Troublesome.

Meantime, the care of horses has been getting more trodblesome and expensive, and it has been a daily trial to get boys or young men for delivery clerks who were capable and yet not too costly for their natural capacity to get through the work. In summer, it has been hot, with danger of sunstroke to horses if crowded to any extent; in winter it has been cold and slippery, and altogether the old regime is passing away.

Two High-Wheeled Machines.

About three months ago, therefore, I determined that the time had come to make a change—and I have made it. I have two of the high-wheeled machines, 20 h.p., covered, with ample capacity on the two decks; so that it is readily possible to load an average of 40 orders at once, and things look very much better than when I had three waggons in service.

Send Man and Boy.

It is actual economy to send a man and a boy out with each heavy load, to get the goods out promptly, and, in fact, the problem now is how to get enough goods ready, or get them ready quickly enough; whereas our former trouble was that the goods were often ready and waiting for waggons to return. I have not had the rigs long enough in service to give the results of practical experience; but I think the following statement will indicate how things tend to drift.

Comparative Statement.

Running invest. in horses, say	$ 350
The same in waggons	400
Incidentals, harners, blankets, etc., say	150
Total	$ 900
Interest on $900 at 6 p.c.	$ 54
Depreciation, 20 p.c. per annum	180
Wear and tear (repairs and upkeep) 20 p.c.	180
Board of horses, $70 per month	840
3 boys, $10 per week average	1,560
Ins. on the outfit, say	26
Total annual cost waggon del.	$2,840
2 autos cost, complete	$1,500
Interest on $1,500 at 6 p.c.	$ 90
Depreciation, 20 p.c. per an.	300
Wear and tear (repairs and upkeep), say 5 per cent.	75
2 men at $12 per week	1,248
2 boys at $9 p.w. (half time)	468
Accident and fire insurance	130
Oil and gasoline, say	189
Barn rent for two machines	100
Total annual cost of auto del.	$2,600

Advantage in Service.

I think that I am figuring very safely in this way. I feel that, in fact, I have a respectable "margin of safety" in these computations, as regards simple cost; and I know I have an immense advantage as regards service. Items which modify the estimates are several, of which the following are a few:

1. The estimate of $900 for investment in waggon delivery is certainly an inside figure, as I probably had more money in the outfit; but aside from that I think I have that part of it about right.

The Actual Cost.

2. Estimate on the autos is right, just right, as I have put in the actual cost.

3. The men running the autos are simply drivers so far; but they are learning the grocery business, and when they have it learned, they will be able to handle most of the deliveries all alone; thus cutting out the boys' help except in emergencies. When they become very efficient and get to be really economical handlers of goods, I shall have to pay them probably $15 per week, and in time, may have to pay more. But you will note that I have a big margin left wherewith to pay those advanced wages, and such advances will operate to do away with the extra boys, leaving them in the store for extra inside work, hastening the preparation of orders, and in other ways increasing the efficiency of the organization.

Hard as You Like.

But the most important gains are those of service and generally bettered conditions. In hot weather, we shall not have to "spare the horse" on the long journeys in the sun; and if there be needful deliveries after regular hours, we shall not have to fear that we are overworking the animals. Whether the work begins early and ends late—or continues all night—or runs over Sundays—the autos will not suffer more than ordinary wear and tear, so long as the lubricating oil is liberally used.

Nothing So Important.

Now note this: There is no part of our business which is so important as the delivery end of it. This is not only because of the importance of promptness, but because of the desirableness of having it accurate; and men are better than boys, as a rule, in promoting and understanding accuracy. Furthermore, the man who sees our customers is the delivery clerk. Many of our regular customers do not come to the store at all, or come only occasionally. Does it occur to us often enough that our only personal representative to the house of our customers is our delivery clerk? Do we give sufficient thought to the fact of this personal representation?

Wages Not Attractive.

Now, in the past, as demonstrated above, Johnson & Son were under heavy expense to provide three boys, on three waggons, at $10 per week each. Such wages could not be attractive to men who were of the right calibre to meet our customers. Any man who might take such pay would either be comparatively worthless or would be there only as a temporary matter—waiting for a chance to leave us for his own betterment. But under the auto-plan we are able to hire men at steady work at wages which will be an inducement to them to make good and remain permanently with us. These men can afford to dress reasonably well, making a presentable appearance; will become well and favorably acquainted with our trade; will learn the little preferences, likes and dislikes of our patrons, and generally can be relied on to become fixtures in the organization—much to our mutual benefit.

More Than Three Horses.

Lastly, these machines will deliver more goods than any three waggons could possibly do; hence, this arrangement will yield us greater efficiency; greater efficiency will lead to much prompter deliveries; a prompter delivery will operate to increase our business; larger business will make us more money—and so on, around and around the spiral which will carry our business steadily upward to greater achievement and generally better things.

That is the way I have it doped out—any objections?

HALF-HOLIDAY IN HALIFAX.

Retail Grocers Decide on Having Time Off Each Week.

Halifax, May 11.—The retail grocers of Halifax held a meeting this week and decided to hold a weekly half holiday during the months of May, June, July and August.

Thursday will probably be the day observed, but if the other trades, in case the half holiday idea becomes general, should decide on a day, except Saturday, more generally convenient, they are willing to fall in line.

For some time the grocers of Dartmouth have had a mid-week holiday, and it has worked out most successfully to the employer and the employe. All the grocers close their stores at one o'clock, except when a public holiday occurs during the week, when the holiday takes precedence.

Shipments of molasses are now coming along. The schooner Burleigh arrived here this week with 287 puncheons, 44 hhds. and 50 barrels. Barbados is quoted at 33 cents per gallon in barrels, and 28 cents per gallon in puncheons.

TOO MANY HOLIDAYS.

Halifax merchants are contemplating keeping open on Victoria Day and closing for the King's birthday, June 3rd, Coronation Day, June 22, and Dominion Day, July 1st. They are of the opinion, in the East, that holidays come a little too close together this year.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

SOLD SHARES TO FARMERS.

A dealer in Chamberlin, South Dakota, recently incorporated his business under the laws of that state, with a capitalization of $50,000. He solicited the farmers of the surrounding country to buy shares, guaranteeing a dividend of seven per cent., and appears to have been quite successful.

His whole scheme simmers down to a battle against the mail order houses. He knew perfectly well that the farmer will take a keen interest in anything or any place where his money has gone before, and he counted upon securing their trade.

But he did more than that. He got their money as well. The farmers in this case supplied the money to carry on the concern, and also some of the trade necessary if they were to be paid back their seven per cent. in dividends.

Merchants in many towns in Canada might well take example of this United States dealer. They could easily do so up to a point at least. The farmer contributes a good deal of business to somewhere and if he be sufficiently interested by any proposition that his attention is drawn away from the catalogues of the mail order houses, then a good, big forward step has already been taken. The Chamberlin dealer was a pioneer. There will be surely some to follow the bold lead.

INSPECTION OF SCALES.

The opinion seems to be gaining ground throughout the country that in regard to the inspection of scales, the dealer should not have to pay the cost of the inspector who finds his scale to be correct. And on the other hand few grocers will seriously object to "footing the bill," when he is shown that his scale is wrong.

This is human nature. There should be no half-way measure. Either the government should appoint enough inspectors to inspect regularly and properly, or else the salaries and expenses of the men who are now going around should be paid out of public funds.

Generally speaking the grocers of Canada would welcome a regular inspection. It could be made an asset for them. If it obtained there would be no more suspicious glances thrown on the scales by customers. The visit of the government official would clear this away, as a broom, wielded in deft hands, removes cobwebs from remote corners.

The grocers are not complaining because the scales are inspected. They are complaining that they are not inspected often enough.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Grocers in Mitchell, Ont., complain bitterly that profitable business there is much hampered and interfered with by the action of dry goods men whom they say, sell certain lines of groceries at cost as a sideline.

The grocers report that these men are selling canned goods at ten cents a can, soap at six bars for a quarter, and various other lines at similar low prices. One dealer, formerly a grocery traveler, is giving up his grocery business and going into fancy goods lines.

This competition of the dry goods stores is not fair. It is not legitimate business to pick out from the goods sold by a non-competitor, certain quick sellers, and retail them out at cost, so that they may secure the customer's trade in their own lines. Such conditions as these gag progress. No man, knowing the conditions will want to embark in any new business there. No one who is in business will want to remain. The town will be held back. Where once the citizens pointed with pride to the well-stocked brightly-lit stores there will be gloom and dejection. It is bound to come.

But it should not be. Wholesalers should refuse to sell these men, so that they will be unable to compete with the legitimate grocers, who are the legitimate customers of the wholesalers. No condition of affairs, such as this should be allowed to exist.

OUR SPRING NUMBER.

The next issue of The Grocer (May 19), will be our big 1911 spring number. In view of the extra amount of work entailed in getting out such a large issue—color, printing, presswork, binding, etc.—there may be some delay in the time it reaches our readers. We would therefore, ask you to "bear with us" a little for we can assure you when the spring number does arrive, it will equal, if not excel, any you have ever read in the past. One of the principal editorial features will be the results of our competition on "Constructive Salesmanship" in which some of Canada's best retail dealers, or their salesmen, tell how they increase their sales. The nine winners receive medals.

A SQUARE DEAL TO ALL.

LET THE BUYER BEWARE ! Would you care to have such a sign hung by an indignant customer over your store door ? Hardly ! and yet there are dealers who would deserve it because they really are "out to do" certain purchasers on every chance allowed them. Yet it is freely admitted that this class is wearing few.

That some are left is because there are retailers who draw so small a profit from regular custom that they jump with eagerness at any opportunity which would enable them to overcharge some buyer who probably comes in the establishment only once in every long while.

That is PEDDLER POLICY, and it can also be classified with the business morality of certain hotel clerks who charge transient travelers just what they consider they can drag out of them, without driving them away.

But a dealer is not in the class of the transient peddler. He is in his place to stay. Let him "do" somebody, and he is quite likely to hear of it, which is certainly going to work to his disadvantage in the opinions of even his regular customers.

There should be a square deal to all. That is the only way of running a business so that no evil report comes back, boomerang fashion, to the ears of the dealer.

NOTES.

Paper makes a good polisher for glass.

As the warmer weather comes on there will be an increase in the pickle and oilve trade. The grocer should look to his pickle stocks in plenty of time.

Before you start to put ice in your refrigerator give it a thorough cleaning so as to eliminate any bad odor it may have contracted during the winter months and which might affect goods placed in it.

Montreal, May 11th.—Local jobbers still report business of the most satisfactory character and while such an optimistic note is sounded by the wholesale trade it may be safely taken for granted that the grocery world as far as Canada and particularly this eastern portion is concerned is on a sound basis.

The big local wholesalers are receiving regular shipments of goods but these are more interesting from the fact that they are brought to the local docks and shipments will be likely heavier than usual from this out. Sugar, Jamaica rum and molasses are some of the goods from the West Indies, and from Europe come English jellies, pickles, biscuits, liquors, dried fruits and so on. New lemons are also arriving. The bringing in of many of our groceries is not often thought of except when one actually sees the work of unloading.

Teas are again brought prominently before the trade as the result of the Japanese government enactment against coloring the new crop and future crops. In Montreal there is a tendency to boost the price of the colored stocks held at present and some of the houses report advances of five cents a pound. On the other hand jobbers state that they do not intend to increase their prices. It will be seen, therefore, that for the present the market while strong is unsettled. Ceylon teas are also firmer and the market as a whole is of interest to the grocer. As one jobber recently said, "It looks as if low priced teas are a thing of the past."

Sugar.—The market is at least steady, but it is difficult to form an idea of what development the near future will bring. The season of the big demand is approaching and considerable sugar is also required for soft drinks. The Cuban crop is estimated at various figures some claiming that it will be under 1,500,000 tons others that a yield of 1,600,000 tons is quite probable. The rainy season is not far away and on the island the number of grinders is reduced to 82. One report says, "Enough is known as to the fundamental points to make a fairly solid foundation under values."

Dried Fruits.—Dried fruits cease to be of interest. Stocks are reduced to a minimum. Some of the local houses are unable to offer some lines of dried fruits, others state they are reduced to a low point and apparently none of them are fearing a surplus at the end of the year. In fact those who are fairly well supplied, especially in those lines in which the scarcity is most marked, are not falling over themselves in an effort to dispose of all their goods. One firm is fairly well supplied with Malaga raisins, figs, currants in pound packages and has a moderate stock of seeded raisins, but the showing of other fruits is practically exhausted. Some houses are better off than others but none of them seem to have an exceptional advantage over the others. Prices are certainly not standing still. Figs are reported weak but otherwise the market is firm.

Regarding currants, the statistical position is reported exceptionally strong, the available fruit for export being estimated at not more than 18,000 tons, and with an anticipated demand of probably 8,000 tons more than the supplies. It is on these facts that holders in Greece are willing to carry their fruit with the firm expectations of better prices before any new crop can be available. New crop up to the present has progressed satisfactorily, but it is too early to make any definite statements with respect to probable out-turn.

Coffee.—The coffee market does not offer any new features. Locally the situation remains unchanged. In the primary markets bull interests point out the statisical strength of the coffee position but the results have not yet been very apparent.

Teas.—Following the announcement that new crop Japan tea will not be colored as ordered by the government, there an evident feeling that prices of colored teas now held are likely to be advanced. Customers accustomed to green teas will ask for it then as long as a supply is offered and the grocers will look to wholesalers who as the stocks decrease may be expected to increase their price. That is one feeling among the trade. Another tea dealer stated that he did not intend to advance his prices and his customers could have his stocks at present quotations which would not be changed. He gives his reasons for not intending to make an advance and hopes to be cleaned up on colored teas by the time the new crop is on the market. The new Japan crop will soon be offered and early teas are already reported for sale. The disappearance of the green teas will, of course, be brought about, but there is no doubt that many people will be surprised when the truth dawns upon them. Among several houses, Japan teas are reported advanced five cents a pound, but then there are other houses that quote no advancement. The whole tea market is firm. The rubber industry is very largely responsible for the present condition and has grown at the expense of the tea industry. The tea market just now demands the interest of the grocer.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—The new packs are claiming more and more attention. Now it is the salmon prospects that are being "gambled" with. According to tradition and apparently facts this is a year of the light run and jobbers expect that the opening prices will be fifty cents higher than last year's opening quotations. It is learned that a number of contracts have been signed up on this basis. A brisk demand for canned goods is generally felt. One of the houses at least quotes canned corn at 95-97½ cents the reduction apparently resulting from stocks that are felt to be too heavy at this time of the year. This is the only line in which there is a tendency to drop prices. They are, otherwise, held steadily.

TORONTO.—A steady trade is being done in canned fruits and scarcity is becoming noticeable in a number of lines. Prices have been advanced on black and red raspberries which are now quoted at 1.90 for 2's. Different dealers find scarcity in stocks of different lines. At one house raspberries and pears were given special note while another house reported their stocks as none too large in canned peaches, strawberries or plums. Canned salmon while enjoying only a normal trade is steady in price. Sorting orders for canned vegetables, particularly tomatoes and corn are arriving quite freely. There seems to be no surplus in stocks of any lines and dealers are doing no worrying over the disposal of stocks.

POINTERS—
Dried Fruits—Several advances.
Nuts—Firmer.
Canned Raspberries—Higher.
Tapioca—Advanced.
Tea—Firm.

Toronto, May 11.—The grocery trade seems to have taken on more life lately or at least dealers seem to be well satisfied with the volume of trade for this time of the year. Several houses state that an expansion has been brought about by the opening of navigation on the lakes. Others say that trade has been on the quiet side for a time and dealers have allowed their stocks to get small and are now replenishing them. Collections are reported fair for the season.

Wholesalers report that trade in sugar is rather quiet, retailers having sufficient stocks, the consumption just now being small, but will soon begin to show an increase.

Special stress has been laid on the dried fruit market for some time back and apparently was fully warranted. This week further advances are noted by local houses in prunes, evaporated apples and raisins. Supplies of the first two fruits are so small that there is not a great deal of trade being done but raisins are pretty brisk, and advances have been made especially in seeded. Even present quotations are claimed to be as low as purchases can be made by wholesalers from packers.

Different firms find themselves differently situated in regard to supplies of canned fruits, but a general scarcity is admitted. The lines short and the degree of shortness varies with several houses. Black and red raspberries have been advanced to $1.90 this week.

Sugar.—The raw sugar market after a slightly easier tendency last week has again steadied up to a position of considerable strength.

Dried Fruits.—With the situation in dried fruits becoming more acute as the season advances and available supply grows smaller, as expected under such conditions prices show an upward tendency. This was particularly noticeable this week and a number of advances have taken place. Prunes go upward with a stride that clearly denote the condition of stocks here, and now range from 12 cents for 90s to 100s to 17 cents for 30s to 40s. No 50s to 60s, 60 to 70, or 70 to 80s. are to be had on this market.

Tea.—The local tea market continues firm as does also the primary. The edict by the Japanese government that no more colored teas shall be made has as yet had no particular effect on Japan teas. "This ruling some years ago," said one dealer, "would have been regarded as of great importance but the amount of Japan teas imported into this country is yearly growing smaller. The consumption of Japan teas in Canada has fallen in ten years from 9,000,000 pounds to approximately one-third that figure.

Coffee.—The local coffee market strong position. Prices are steady especially in Rio and Santos.

Rice and Tapioca.—A normal amount of business is being transacted in rice at unchanged prices. An advance in tapioca does not come as a surprise as its strength has been noticeable for some time. Some dealers are asking even higher than present prices as the situation no doubt warrants. Trade is steady.

Nuts.—Strength is noticeable in a number of lines of nuts, Bordeaux and Marbot walnuts and Formigetta almonds having advanced slightly. Damage to the almond crop in Spain is reported. New crop Brazil nuts are quoted slightly lower by some firms this week. Trade is not overly large in volume.

Spices.—Spices are in fair demand for this season of the year. Prices in general are steady. Peppers both black and white are quite stiff in the primary market. Nutmegs which are from 2 to 3 cents higher than last November are holding their own while cloves remain steady.

Beans.—There is no particularly change in the bean situation this week. Prices seem quite firm with business inclined to be quiet.

Prime beans, per bushel	1 90	2 10
Hand picked beans, per bushel	2 10	2 25

Seeds.—Although the big rush for timothy, alsike and red clover is pretty well over, sorting orders are coming in quite freely. Prices for all lines especially the high-grades are steady while timothy which is so dear this year is fractionally higher. A feature of the season is the large quantities of seed corn going to the country while sorting orders for this line will continue to come in for quite a while yet, as the sowing season extends in some parts of the country until late in June.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—Steady.
Syrup.—Advanced.
Coffee.—Declined.

Winnipeg, May 6.—Encouraging conditions still continue to prevail throughout the entire West. Seeding is in full swing, and is reported to be pretty well advanced in many parts of the West. The sharp frost which occurred last week is reported to have done but little damage, and as a result this optimistic feeling is reflected on the trade.

The local market has been very active. Large stocks of all lines are being brought in by lake route. Many were getting rather low. The most noticeable feature has been the advance of ten cents per case in syrup. For a long time the syrup market has been exceedingly strong, and this advance has been predicted frequently. Special strength on the American markets resulted in prices being raised yesterday on this market.

The coffee market has on the other hand been on the downward move, and declines in green Rio coffee and roasted coffee have taken place.

Dried fruits continue to be scarce, but a steady trade is being carried nevertheless.

Sugar.—On last week's decline an active movement has been taking place in sugar. No further change has taken place in prices, as the tone of the market is as strong as ever. Stocks are of considerable size now, and large orders have been wired for by some wholesalers who expect an advance due to strength on Southern markets in the near future.

Dried Fruits.—An advancing market has been in progress this week. Stocks in all lines are getting low, as there are no supplies in any part of Canada to be drawn from. The result is that prices have been advancing in proportion to the size of the local stocks.

Raisins are scarce, and slightly higher. Prunes, especially sizes of 60 to 70, 70 to 80 and 80 to 90, it is impossible to procure. Dried peaches have advanced one-half cent per pound, and dried apricots about the same. It is expected that in a short while some of these lines will be off the market entirely.

Evaporated Apples.—Stocks of evaporated apples are almost cleaned out, and only a few are held locally. One house reports that those held by them are being sold at 14⅞c for 50s, and 15⅜c for 25s.

Syrup and Molasses. — Strength on the southern markets caused an advance to take place here yesterday of ten cents per case. As stated above, this advance has been predicted for over a month. Fair sized stocks are held here, but an active market is taking place.

Coffee.—The green Rio coffee market declined a half cent per pound during the week, which corresponds to a drop of two cents per pound in roasted. The cause of the decline appears to be due solely to lower markets to the south. One of the largest wholesalers in replying to the question stated that as far as he knew this was the only cause for it.

Beans and Peas.—A slight decline has taken place in the bean market, and ordinary beans are quoted 5 cents per bushel lower. Hand picked beans remain unchanged. Peas are also firm.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, May 1.—Business continues good in all grocery lines. Jobbers report that stocks of canned goods are rapidly being cleaned up, and that it is probable that prices will advance. There is a heavy demand for corn, peas and tomatoes. There is also a scarcity of prunes on the market, and prices are higher. Retail dealers say that owing to the scarcity of prunes, that evaporated apricots are selling freely. Valencia onions are now off the market, and the trade is being supplied with Egyptians and Bermuda. The latter stock is quoted at $2.00 per crate. Egyptians are selling at 3½ cents per pound.

American clear pork is down to $22.00, and American beef is quoted at $19.00.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., May 10.—The only changes made in the local markets last week were in the prices of canned tomatoes which are scarce and high, being quoted at $1.50 per dozen, and in American clear pork which has dropped 50 cents and is now offered at $20 to $23.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

J. W. Windsor, Montreal, have delivered new pack of Ice Castle lobsters on Montreal market this week. This is the earliest delivery for many years.

Large and important changes have been made in the building of the United Soap Co., of Canada, Limited, at Montreal. An extension has been built and soap boiling plant has been installed, also machinery for making soap powder and scouring soaps. The manufacture of soap will be carried on in all its branches and the company begs to draw the attention of the trade to the fact that they are placing on the market a laundry soap of a high quality at an exceptionally reasonable price.

D. L. Sterling is again sales manager of the St. Charles Condensing Co. No sooner was this announced to the Canadian trade than Mr. Sterling was the recipient of many congratulatory messages. He was formerly sales manager for this company at which time he made many warm friends among the wholesale trade of Canada.

Oshawa Canning Company, Ltd., Oshawa, Ont., is installing new machinery and extending their plant to handle the increased demand of this season.

Alfred W. Daviss has been appointed secretary of the Acadia Sugar Refining Co., Halifax, N.S., succeeding the late T. M. Cutler. Mr. Daviss received his first acquaintance with the sugar business in the office of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co., at Montreal. Later he went with the beet sugar company, at Farnham, Que., and at the inception of the old Halifax Sugar Refining Co., Mr. Daviss was appointed sales manager. He was finally transferred to the Acadia Sugar Refining Co. when the three Maritime Province refineries were amalgamated in 1893. He is well known to the trade in Toronto having acted locum tenens for a time in 1896 during the absence of Wallace Anderson, the company's representative there.

Hamilton's Board of Trade, always aggressive and progressive, inaugurated a scheme which certainly has been the means of opening the eyes of many of its own citizens. Most of the larger factories at the request of the Board of Trade, agreed to throw open their doors to various deputations of citizens and manufacturers, who were driven around the city in automobiles kindly provided by the Board of Trade. Several large and influential deputations visited the Ontario Lantern and Lamp Co.'s extensive works and were astonished at the magnitude of the plant. They were shown all through the various departments and were then taken through The Canadian Tungsten Lamp Co.'s works, watching with great interest the various processes of grinding, squirting, treating and mounting filaments. These deputations afterwards visited several other factories where they were also well received.

H. Gilbert Nobbs, Toronto, manager of Holbrooks, Ltd., for Canada and the United States, has returned from a trip to England.

Some Hints.

It is valuable to be able to place stock properly, so that it will show up best, and also so that all possible time can be saved.

The aim of the grocer should be to carry as small a stock as possible but yet carry a stock large enough to handle all the business he can get.

Lard is Easier and Eggs are Firmer

Increase in World's Lard Supply—Hogs This Year are Good Lard Producers—Eggs are Firmer at Most Centres—Provision Market is Unsettled—Hogs Lower in Toronto — Higher in Montreal—Butter is Firmer in Montreal, but Lower in Toronto—Prospects for Butter Production are Good.

Trade in pork products is reported fairly satisfactory for this season of the year, the warmer and fine weather being held accountable. The farmer during the cold weather is able to kill and use his own meat, but with the advent of the warmer weather this is not possible, and he has to purchase supplies. From now on there will be an increase in the sale of smoked and cooked meats, which reaches its height in the middle of the summer, and continues good until well into the fall.

Canadian live hog markets seem to be acting in direct opposition to one another this week. While the Toronto market has declined, Montreal has moved in the opposite direction, owing to short supplies and a keener demand on the part of the packers. United States markets are steady this week on account of only a normal delivery, but pretty liberal runs are expected.

Lard is seasier on most Canadian markets, with a ½ cent decline at Toronto and slightly lower quotations at Winnipeg. The world's visible supply of lard on May 1st was 214,370 tierces, compared with 192,236 tierces on Apr. 1st and 112,377 on May Ist of last year. Stocks in America are 85,370 tierces, compared with 72,736 on Apr. 1.

Just at present, there seems to be keen competition between dealers at different centres for supplies of eggs and prices are firmer, with slight advances at several points. The production on the whole seems to be heavier than at this time last year, and there are some dealers who do not expect the present steadiness to continue.

While Montreal butter rules firm this week, the Toronto market is from 1 to 2 cents lower, under heavy receipts, that at present exceed consumption. With the prospects excellent for an abundant production of butter, and with it conceded at many centres that the quantity of held butter is quite large, it does not look as if prices will go higher, at any rate, for a time.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—The provision market is rather unsettled. A fair demand is passing, especially in hams and bacon, for which the call is gradually increasing. Supplies in these lines are ample to fill present requirements. The demand for lard is a little slower, and the feeling is easier. Live hogs are firmer in tone, owing to short supplies and a keener demand on the part of some packers. Dressed stock is without change.

Butter.—Slightly advanced prices are noticeable this week in butter quotations. At country points, offerings for the finest new creamery were higher in tone, and locally the market showed sympathy with this movement. The production of cheese is heavy, daily and weekly returns showing an increase over the output a year ago. The market is apparently on a steady basis.

Eggs.—The market is firmer this week and shows a slight advance in prices. An explanation of this fact is offered by reports of higher prices being paid at country points, and the keen competition between eastern and western shippers for supplies. The demand continues active and the market is steady just now. The production seems to be heavier than at this time last year.

Cheese.—The local cheese market is firm and interesting. Production is good and the price now offered is somewhat in advance of that which ruled a year ago. Exports of cheese for the season have already begun, the shipments from Montreal for the first week, ending last Saturday totaled 16,976 boxes, as against 16,791 for the corresponding week last year.

TORONTO.

Provisions. — Another 25 cents has been lopped off live hog prices this week, being the result of another effort to get pork products down to an export basis, which move is said to be necessary before the provision market will be satisfactory.

"If the bacon market continues its present course," said one dealer, "it will soon be no compliment to be called a hog, which it was in a certain manner a year ago when prices were so high."

As a result of this further decline, the provision market exhibits an easier feeling, and another reduction of ½ cent has been made in lard, bringing the pure product in tierces down to 10 to 10¼ cents. Some time ago the opinion was expressed by more than one dealer that lard had reached the bottom, but still the easiness continues. One reason is that the class of hogs being marketed are good lard producers.

Butter.—Receipts of butter have continued heavy, and prices as expected in such a case have slumped further, and reductions ranging from 1 to 2 cents have been made down the whole list, and fresh creamery prints may now be had from 23 to 24 cents. Demand has kept at a fair volume, but not nearly large enough to take care of all arrivals, and hence the cause of reduction. With a continuance of heavy receipts, and the present stocks of butter held, there are dealers who fear that some further reductions will come.

Provisions.—Further declines have taken place on the lard market. Chicago packers have been forcing the price of hogs down to such an extent on that market that they have been forced to lower the price of lard, which has resulted in a declining market prevailing over the entire North American continent. The price of live hogs on the local market has been holding steady at $6.75 per cwt. for the last three weeks. A few sales were made yesterday at $7 per cwt. Dealers state however, that in the face of lower markets east and south, the price cannot remain at that figure here. Other changes will be noticed in the price list.

Eggs.—Supplies of eggs continue to arrive in large quanties from local points. Prices hold firm at 16½ cents delivered Winnipeg.

Cheese.—Slightly lower prices are prevailing for cheese. A steady trade is still continuing. New quotations are 13 to 13½ for Manitoba and 13½ to 14 cents for Manitoba twins. Eastern cheese is offered at 14¾c for ordinary, and 15 cents for twins.

Butter.—Considerable quantities of held-over stocks are now being offered. This is of very poor quality and can only be classed as inferior butter. Dealers are offering 8 cents per pound for this, but at even that figure they would rather not handle any. Creamery butter is down one cent per pound and dairy butter is also lower.

EGGS CUT TO FIVE CENTS.

Crazy Competition Pursued by Detroit Merchants.

Two Detroit grocers recently engaged in a price cutting contest that should be an example to those retailers who carry on this suicidal competition.

These two are located on opposite sides of the same street. One put out a big display sign advertising eggs at 24 cents. The other met it. Price-cutting continued on both sides till the price was reduced to 8 cents a dozen on the part of one store and 5 cents a dozen in the other.

As the grocer making this offer had frequently to replenish his stocks, other grocers of the vicinity soon found out what was going on and sent messengers to buy eggs at the low price. Each store therefore disposed of a great quantity to other grocers at a loss of from 10 to 20 cents a dozen.

It is very doubtful if any advertising advantages arose to either of the two merchants concerned in this competition. At any rate it was quite expensive advertising. Grocers would make more money if they would compete on the basis of quality and service than if they stake their whole reputation on the ability to sell goods cheap.

INVESTIGATING SUGAR.

Washington, May 11th.—The United States government is after any trusts that may exist. The American Sugar Refining Company is now to be investigated by Congress with a view of obtaining information as to possible violation of the anti-trust act. The committee is instructed to ascertain whether the operations of the trust have caused:

First, the restriction or destruction of competition among refiners of sugar.

Second, an increase in the price of sugar over the price prior to the organization of the trust.

Third, an increase in price of sugar in this country over the price paid in other countries.

It further shows that a larger percentage of good Cream Tartar is handled by the Grocery trade than by Druggists in Canada, and that the larger percentage of it is Gillett's Cream Tartar.

Flour and Rolled Oats are Both Firm

Under Higher Values in Raw Material—Wheat Shows Some Advancement Over a Week Ago—Has Been Some Talk of Advance in Flour—Domestic Trade is Fair—Export Inquiries are Out of Line—Oat Market Has Advanced — Good Foreign Demand.

In sympathy for the higher quotations for wheat, a much stronger feeling obtains in flour. There has been some talk of an advance in price but all millers have not agreed on this point and no announcement has been made. There are those millers who believe that wheat will drop below present prices and are inclined to wait to see how the wheat market acts before making any change. Those millers who have large contracts feel no need of advancing prices as they would have to deliver at contract prices anyway, while on the other hand those millers who are differently situated and who are buying wheat at present prices would welcome an advance.

While wheat values had a set back on Saturday last, the first part of this week brought them back to their old position. Some dealers believe that wheat values are being somewhat unduly inflated. One report from Chicago says: "According to the view of some conservative market men, the present May manipulation is a bold and daring coup with the chances against its ultimate success. These speculators may find themselves at the end of their deal with a corpse altogether too big to bury except in the graveyard of their own profits. They have been vainly trying to arouse apprehension because of the alleged lack of moisture in the Northwest, but although rain will be needed there during the month, it is far from time to worry as yet. Taking the situation from a general view point it seems difficult at this writing to predict other than disaster to the plans of those who are attempting to manipulate it."

While some dealers believe differently, it is for this reason that some millers believe that wheat may react.

The world's shipments of wheat last week amounted to 12,176,000 bushels compared with 11,088,000 the previous week and 9,168,000 for last week.

While domestic trade in flour continues normal, there is a scarcity of export orders. While there has been a fair inquiry from the English markets, bids were out of line with present quotations.

Oats are firmer again this week, under a good foreign demand, and prices are higher than those ruling a week ago. While No. 2 Canadian Western oats were quoted at 40 to 41 in Montreal last week, as high as 42½ cents is now being asked. In sympathy with the higher raw material, the rolled oats market is firm.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—There is a steady demand for flour but the market at present is rather uneventful. Prices are unchanged but there is a stronger feeling apparent although it may not result in advanced prices.

Flour.—Wheat has made some little advancement over a week ago and No. 1 Northern Manitoba is quoted at $1.00½. There is a much stronger feeling in flour in sympathy with the raw material. While there has been some talk of advancing prices, all the leading millers are not unanimous on this point, and as yet no change has been announced. Some millers are uncertain as to whether wheat will stay at the present price and are inclined to wait before taking action. Ontario wheat is strong at present also, No. 2 winter wheat quoted at 86 to 87 cents compared with 81 cents a few weeks ago.

The Selling Tactics of Two Clerks

Striking Comparison of Methods Used by Two Salesmen in Selling Olive Oil and Jam Respectively—The Customer Who Talked and the Clerk Who Sold—Knowledge of Stock Essential if Good Results Are to be Secured.

It has been proven many times that a salesman can sell "just as good" goods. But in order to do so he must understand the article which he is substituting. A customer enters a store and asks for a certain brand of goods. The line is not carried but they have another which is equally as good. The salesman if he wishes to sell that customer, must thoroughly understand the article in question and its talking points if he would convince the purchaser of their equal quality.

A customer entered a grocery store the other day to purchase olive oil. He approached the clerk and said: "I want a bottle of olive oil."

Now the clerk did not know whether the olive oil they had was ——— or not. He walked to the place where the supply was kept and returned with a bottle saying, "I guess we don't keep ———." However, he had heard the boss recommend this one to a customer and he continued, "This is very good olive oil though."

"What brand is it?" asked the customer.

Picked Out Name.

The clerk again showed his lack of knowledge of his goods by having to look at the label to find out the name. "P-U-R-P-I-S, Purpis," he spelled out. Will you take a bottle of it."

"No." said the customer, "I want Pink's. It is the best olive oil sold. There are none of the others as good," and the clerk meekly replied, "Is that so?" and discontinued his attempt to sell.

How much better it would have been if he had understood his goods and been able to say, "No we don't keep ———, but I feel safe in saying that this is just as good, if not better. The government report describes it as pure olive oil and that should be as high a recommend as a person should want. Every customer we have sold it to, has been well pleased and I feel confident that if you try a bottle you will be pleased also."

In selling Jam.

In another store, the article under discussion was jam. In this the clerk exhibited full knowledge of his goods and complete faith in the article he was recommending with the result that he was able to make a sale.

The customer enquired for a jar of Blank's jam.

"We do not keep Blank's, madam, but we have one which is of equally good quality. It is ——— brand. I think you will find it very satisfactory."

"No," said the customer, "I have always heard that Blank's was the best."

"I believe, madam, that if you tried this you would change your opinion. That it is pure is shown in the government analysis which places it as high grade, while I, myself, having used it can vouch for its taste and therefore, I do not hesitate to recommend it to you."

A Customer Convinced.

"I believe then that I will try a couple of jars," the customer answered.

The difference in these two sales can easily be appreciated. In the one, the clerk allowed the customer to talk to him because he had no arguments in favor of his goods, while in the other case, the clerk had studied the points of the article and talked to the customer.

The latter clerk, picking up a package from the counter said "What about tapioca, Mrs. Customer? We have just put in stock this quick tapioca which requires no soaking and a pudding may be prepared from it in 15 minutes."

"What is it worth?" enquired the customer, and the clerk gave the price and launched into a talk on the splendid food values of tapioca.

A customer wants to be satisfied of getting full value for her money and the next question was "How much will it make?" The clerk showed his knowledge of the goods by telling how much it would make and finished up by selling her a package.

Should Prepare for the Holiday to Make a Profit

May 24th, Victoria Day should bring an increase in trade to the dealer who exerts himself to get it, sufficiently. In all parts of Canada the day is recognized as a holiday and excellent opportunities are presented to the grocer to make of it a tidy little profit. It is well that he plan far enough ahead that when the time comes, he will be fully prepared to get his share of the trade.

At this time of the year it is advisable to have a window trimmed in keeping with the day. Something that will bring the holiday more prominently before the public. It should be prepared early, say on Monday so as to put the people into the holiday spirit early in the week.

Some suggestions are here given for such a window. Being observed in remembrance of the late Queen, it is only fitting that you have a picture of her in the window. This should be placed back somewhat from the glass and trimmed with flags. In front of this in letters made of oranges the word "Victoria" or "Victoria Day" written out. Behind this at each side of the picture, a pyramid of oranges and farther out up the sides a row of pineapples. Behind the pyramids of oranges, a slightly raised platform on which you may show tomatoes, green goods, soft drinks or bon bons. Behind the picture bananas may be hung while a becoming background may be made with flags. This is a window which should attract some attention if carefully arranged.

As fruit and vegetables are good sellers around this holiday, they should be nicely arranged within the store also, and here further decorations for the day may be made if the merchant so wishes. Confectionery is another line which sells well at this time and to which the merchant should give some attention by a complete stock and a nicely arranged display.

Customers sometimes forget about the stores being closed on Victoria Day so that it would be well for the merchant to put up a sign: "Let us supply all your wants to-day. Stores are closed to-morrow." This may cause a customer to buy more than she otherwise would have and also saves them from disappointment in case they wanted something next day and could not get it.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CROP.

Prince Edward Island has a population of about 100,000, and makes a good showing in the matter of production, the total value of the field crops of the Island in 1910 amounting to nearly $10,000,000. Hay leads in point of value, but the oats amounted to $2,250,000 and wheat amounting to $550,000 was also raised. Three million bushels of potatoes were produced on the Island with a value of $1,200,000.

THE DEADLY COMMON FLY

Oh, trader, swat that fly;
The common fly—
The pesky fly—
The maddening fly—
The buzzing fly—
The sticky fly—
The measly fly—
The dirty fly—
Disgusting fly—
The sickening fly—
Germ-laden fly—
The typhoid fly.

He hates to go;
But then, you know—
Alive or dead,
Blue, black or red—
He hurts your biz.,
And, therefore, his
Should straightway end
By your descending, swooping swat!
Your well-aimed swat!
Your crushing swat!

Be sure to kill;
He's had his fill
Of filthy feeding,
Of nuisance-breeding,
No mercy show,
But let him know
That you and he Can never be
At peace again.

Now swear by hen—
Come rain or shine,
Bad luck or fine,
That sight of him
Or sound of him,
Will bring a swat!
A blighting swat!
A squashing swat!

Definite System in Collecting Debts

British Columbia Dealer Pins His Faith to Follow-up System —Nova Scotian Merchant Outlines Set of Seven Letters which he says, Is Most Effective in Bringing Results—The Gradual Approach to Demand for Cash.

It will be well for the merchant at this time of the year to examine carefully the accounts on his books, and make an effort to reduce them to as small a total as possible. The merchant should no more have his books loaded down with old and long drawn out accounts than he should have his storehouse or space under the counter filled with goods which he does not really need.

Now is a good time for him to go carefully over his books and pick out all old and past-due accounts, also to determine upon a definite course of action in the collecting of them. In some manner clear the trouble up and banish this deadwood off the books. They are about useless there. If nothing better presents itself, get the customer who owes you to give you a promissory note. In this way you have to deal with that customer in the future in regard to that note only. In an account, the customer may dispute it item by item, but with the promissory note this is not possible.

A British Columbia grocer recently said, "At intervals I go over my books and take off all accounts that are past due and place them in a collection book. I then begin a systematic attempt to realize upon them. When an account has run for any length of time, a person cannot expect to collect it on first trial, so that it is necessary to have some follow-up system. I begin with a mild reminder and continue gradually until strongest point is reached when I literally demand the money.

A Nova Scotia merchant has the following follow-up system in sending out letters and he says they are very good if properly used:

(1) "We find a balance on our books of $11.43 against you. We have a large payment to make soon and if you could let us have this amount, it would greatly oblige."

(2) "We would like the payment of your account of $11.43, if you find it convenient."

(3) "We are clearing up our books for this quarter and would like you to call and settle your account."

(4) "We must ask you to let us have a payment on your account at once."

(5) "You have as yet neglected to let us have payment of your account. We have extended liberal terms and as it is far past due, we must ask you for a settlement."

(6) Our previous letters to you in reference to your account have not been answered. We cannot allow this to remain on our books any longer, and must ask you to call and settle the same within ten days."

(7) Unless your account of $11.43 is settled at once, we shall have to place it in the hands of our solicitor for collection. If you wish to save extra cost and trouble, please settle at once."

In this system the idea of gradually continuing up to the strongest point has been carried out. Of course it should be remembered that this exact system does not do for all collections. Circumstances alter cases. Judgment must be used in the wording of all letters.

However, the idea is that every dealer should have a spring house cleaning time on his books and furthermore that the only way to collect most old accounts is to get after them sharply, and not in a half-hearted way as if he did not expect to get them or was asking a favor of the debtor in requesting payment.

THE DELAYED INVOICE

Delayed invoices are a great source of inconvenience to the merchant, and he should when possible, urge upon the wholesaler the necessity of forwarding promptly. Not only do late invoices cause considerable worry to the dealer, but sometimes loss as well. Especially is this true with goods that fluctuate in price. Quite often a dealer is getting goods which he has not handled before.

The goods arrive but the invoice does not. Perhaps a customer enquires for one of the lines received, and the merchant, ignorant whether prices have changed, or not, sells at the old price. Perhaps when the invoice is received, it is found that the price of the goods has gone up, and that, consequently he had sold too low.

But it is not only the direct loss that annoys the merchant. If he unpacks them before the arrival of the invoice he must keep a careful note of the number received and check it off when the invoice arrives where, if he had it on hand, he could check them right up and dispose of the matter.

THE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY MOVEMENT

Ottawa, May 11.—A visitor, with a purpose missionary, to Ottawa, was William Maxwell, of Rothesay, Scotland, president of the International Co-operative Alliance. He is traveling through Canada under the auspices of the Alliance with the purpose of making the aims and objects of co-operation known throughout this country. The history of this commercial movement as outlined by this representative is as follows:—

"It began in Scotland in 1769, and there is one society in Glasgow now which was established in 1800. The principle of the movement, at first, was to enable the members of a co-operative society to obtain the necessities of life at first hand, that is to say, from the producer. There was a slight departure from the original idea in 1844. Instead of dividing the profits on capital it was thought better to divide them on purchases. This is known as the Rochdale plan. The man who buys the most gets the most profit, instead of the man who invests the most. In 1864 there was a federation of the societies. Capital was contributed by societies in their corporate capacity and not as individuals.

"At the present time there is one wholesale society in England and one in Scotland. They do a yearly business amounting to 34,000,000 pounds. The business of the English concern amounts to 24,000,000 pounds, and that of the Scotch company 10,000,000 pounds. The aim of these wholesale co-operative societies is to procure goods in different parts of the world for the various retail societies.

"Thirty-four years ago they placed a buyer in New York whose duty is to procure produce throughout the United States. Seventeen years ago I visited Montreal and recognizing it as an important distributing center, placed a buyer there for the whole of Canada. Six years ago a buyer was placed in Winnipeg, chiefly for the purpose of obtaining grain for the mills of Scotland. Last year $5,000,000 worth of Canadian products were sent to Great Britain.

"In 1880 a good sized surplus was found to exist in the exchequers of the co-operative societies, and they went in for manufacturing. There are now in England and Scotland eight co-operative flour mills, besides many soap works, shirt factories, boot and shoe factories, etc. Three or four ships are employed in carrying goods from Europe to England.

"In the wholesale houses no credit is given beyond a month. If accounts are settled within a month five per cent. is deducted, and if they are allowed to run beyond a month five per cent. is added. In the retail stores no credit is given beyond the amount invested in the society by the purchaser, so that the danger from losses is reduced to a minimum."

Mr. Maxwell's endeavor is to spread the gospel of this doctrine by giving an idea of its operation and success elsewhere. He expresses the idea that the germ of its movement is here, and all that is required to develop it is education.

Fine Weather Helps the Fruit Trade

Higher Temperature Has Benefited Business Considerably—Navel Oranges Still Coming—California Valencias Will Soon be Ready and Big Crop Expected — Grapefruit is Higher—Lemons Enjoying Good Trade—Prices are Firm — Vegetable Trade Satisfactory—Potatoes Higher in Montreal.

Navel oranges are still coming along and while the crop is nearly all in, shipments will probably continue for another couple of weeks. Some Mediterranean Sweets are now being offered but supplies are not large. The Valencia crop in California will begin to move in the near future. It is reported to be a very large one and the quality is claimed to be the best ever produced. It is estimated that there will be close on 6,000 cars, which should mean quite reasonable prices, and a consequent large consumption of the fruit.

It is estimated by the best authorities that this season's citrus crop in California will amount to 48,000 cars. For all this tremendous output it is notable that there are fewer navels left in the state than there were at this time last year, but this season's crop having opened early is probably the cause of this.

Strawberries and pineapples under more plentiful supplies and slightly lower prices, are showing some improvement but are as yet too high for any extraordinary volume of trade. With the advent of cheaper strawberries and pineapples the orange trade will no doubt be affected. While grapefruit supplies are smaller, there are still some shipments from Florida, but at higher prices as was predicted. The quality is excellent, being much better than that received earlier in the season.

Spanish onions are about all cleaned up. Texas onions are somewhat easier under present large supplies. One report says that possibly 60 per cent. of the crop has been shipped and that it looks like a quick finish. The crop is not as large as was at first expected. Egyptian onions which were easier last week, are steady again at present prices.

Lemons keep their strong position with an excellent demand being experienced.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruit.—Fine weather has been of considerable encouragement to the fruit men during the past week. To begin with it was a lemonade temperature and fruits in general benefited in addition to lemons. The latter fruit is more in demand every day and while prices have not changed materially of late it is felt that higher prices will prevail. From one source it is reported that the Sicilian crop is short. Navel oranges are becoming scarce and the price is advancing proportionally. Strawberries are in good demand and are arriving rather freely. It is almost out of the question to quote prices as they are liable to changes almost daily, depending largely upon conditions of supply and demand.

Vegetables.—New beets, carrots and other early vegetables have recently arrived on this market and apart from the fact that they are bringing a nice price they are moving quite satisfactorily. Stocks of last year's Canadian vegetables are still carried but the interest is being centered in the new goods. Potatoes are up, the strength spoken of for weeks past having had a decided effect. Some of the quotations are as high as $1.40 per bag.

Likewise, tomatoes are high. The public's taste just now craves for vegetable and fruit dainties and high prices are not going to materially help sales. The scarcity of tomatoes has been dealt with before. Egyptian and Florida onions are new on the market.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The local fruit market, with the warmer weather of the past week, presents a scene of activity. Strawberries are cheaper at 20 to 22 cents and under the lower price are in better demand. The same is true to a certain extent of pineapples which are down to $3.50 per case. Bananas are going out freely at $1.00 to $1.75 per bunch. Florida grapefruit is getting in smaller supply but there is still some coming along at higher prices as we predicted last week. Apples are almost a thing of the past on this market. Tomatoes as expected are higher at $4.00 to $4.50 per case. Canadian rhubarb has made it's appearance at 75 cents per dozen. Lemons continue steady with a good demand.

$2.50, while Egyptians which took an easier turn last week have reacted and are steady at present quotations. Florida celery is off the local market with the exception of perhaps a few cases. New potatoes are selling at $2.75 per bushel and Canadian asparagus at $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen. Potatoes are steady and the farmer being now busy at seeding the deliveries are not large while the West is also taking a considerable quantity.

Fresh Fruit. — A general advancing market has been prevailing during the week in fresh fruit. Florida grape fruit is quoted again from $5 to $6 per crate. Navel oranges have advanced from 25 cents to 50 cents per box. California lemons have also advanced 50 cents per crate. Louisiana strawberries have gone up 50 cents per crate, in spite of the fact that Arkansas berries are now on the market, and are being offered at $5.00 per 24-quart crate.

Fish Trade Settles to Steady Basis

Satisfactory Steady Demand—Fresh Supplies Coming in Regularly—Brook Trout Expected to Come More Freely—Big Arrival of Fresh Fish at Halifax—Fishing Season is Under Way in Newfoundland—Codfish are Plentiful on South-west Coast.

Market conditions have not changed materially as far as fish is concerned. Business has settled to a steady basis with the demand steady. Fresh supplies are coming in regularly and prices generally are low. Halibut, haddock and cod are freely offered also pike. Whitefish and lake trout are welcome additions to the market and are quoted at a reasonable price. The brook trout season is open but owing to the thickness of the ice shipments have been light. Supplies are expected to come in more freely from now on.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Shad continue scarce and prices have been further advanced this week. Trout and whitefish are now offered on the local market since they began to arrive during the past week. Local dealers expect more liberal supplies of brook trout than have been received. Owing to the thickness of the ice shipments have been small. Halibut, haddock and cod are in good supply and are offered for sale.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The local fish market is rather uneventful. There is a good steady demand, with quite plentiful supplies. Some fish are being brought from the eastern coast, while Lakes Ontario and Erie are supplying their share of the fresh variety. Shrimps are quoted this week at $1.25 per gallon. Finnan Haddie are a shade firmer with 8 cents being asked.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Salt and dry fish stocks are pretty well cleaned up and while a future supply of fresh material is in sight, it is expected that what little there is on hand will probably work off at the high prices. Gaspereux have been taken quite plentifully but the supply is not up to last year, so far. They are being used almost exclusively for kippers and bloaters.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Enormous quantities of fresh fish were landed here this week, the receipts being the heaviest of the season. All bankers coming in from the fishing grounds had good catches and all dealers now have big stocks on hand. It is estimated that over one hundred thousand pounds of fresh fish were landed here this week, besides three thousand quintals of salt cod. Prices hold firm despite the heavy receipts; there is keen competition among the dealers. Halibut is very plentiful in Nova Scotia waters this season, one vessel arriving here this week with 20,000 pounds. The same vessel on a previous trip had 13,000 pounds. There is a good demand for fish, and the trade with Upper Canadian cities is increasing. It is stated that the high prices asked for meat is responsible in a certain measure for the largely increased consumption of fish and it is generally conceded that fish is a much more wholesome food. Only small lobsters are offered for sale on the local market. They are quoted at one dollar per dozen. All the large are shipped to the American market. During the week more than two thousand crates of live lobsters were shipped from Nova Scotia points to Boston, which is the distributing centre for the New England states and New York. Codfish are quoted at $8.00 per quintal.

NEWFOUNLAND.

St. John's.—The fishing season here is now well under way. The latest reports are that codfish are plentiful on the Burin Grounds and also along the South West coast but the East coast reports a scarcity of fish. Herrings are making their appearance everywhere, especially on the Eastern side. The warmer weather which was so badly needed has been welcomed. Some merchants on the south and west coasts have from 300 to 750 pounds of dried fish ready for shipment. The market here is quiet, as there are no fish arriving for sale. Tinned salmon is steady at the present quotation of $5.75 per case.

Fish.—A steady market continues in fresh and smoked fish. All lines of smoked are pretty scarce, and stocks are becoming low. Cod fish is practically off the market as are red herring, and none will be offered before the end of June and July. A SHORT STORY FOR CLERKS

By Old Philosopher

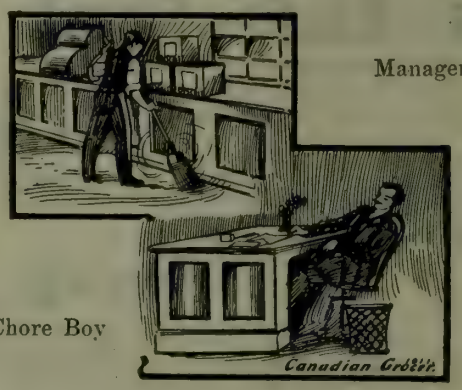
This is a story dealing with the fruit of ambition, and the plucking of it.

There are two kinds of ambition, noble and ignoble; good and bad. The path of the first, if straightly followed leads towards a land that is full of honor and good reward; the course of the latter runs in a roundabout way to poverty and the ill will of the traveler's fellows. It is the noble and good sort that is first treated here.

People have said that ambition only applied to men in politics, in the professions, and in the higher walks of the business world. That is not so. It was a poor man who said once "a cat can look at a king." Probably the English language contains no better expression of the scope of ambition. By no power of transition could the cat become a king. Yet the feline, by the mere sight of Royalty, might be inspired to become a better cat and be an example among its fellows. So it is with man. In all walks of life, he who seeks TO KNOW, other, and mayhap better men, can find something in him that will improve himself, if he be but sincere in the seeking. Truly "a man is part of all that he has met."

So the grocery clerk, to whom the work is not mere drudgery, performed for a niggardly pittance, can better himself in life if he will but pattern himself after his more successful fellows in the trade. He can find in these shining examples of what he himself may become, if he but willing to work and learn. He can make that other man declare him dividends.

True Story of One Ambition.



In a certain well-appointed grocery store in a certain Canadian centre eleven years ago, a certain young man engaged himself as a delivery boy. He thought then only of the day as it came. But he was a good boy. For some time he performed his work in a work way; did it all right, but in a routine way without thought or inspiration. In the course of a few months the spirit of the store began to enter into his soul. He looked about him in the breathing-times between deliveries and saw how everyone in the place was working hard for SOMETHING. He did not know what that something was, but he felt how nice it must be to stand behind a counter, talk to people and sell goods, because those who were doing it seemed to take so much pleasure in the doing of it. They never seemed to be weary or indifferent, as he was often, in the course of the day's work.

The New Inspiration.

Fired with this new desire he began to manifest more interest in his work. He commenced to take pride in his baskets and boxes and strove to have all the customers feel it was a pleasure as well as a duty to deliver the parcels to them in good condition, and to place them in their houses to save trouble on the part of his boss' patrons. He whistled about his work. The boss noticed him after awhile and set him down for promotion as soon as the chance presented itself. The chance came. One of the clerks who had achieved the ELUSIVE SOMETHING for which he had striven left the establishment and the delivery boy was put behind the counter. The surge of pleasure that went over him at the change told him there must be something tangible in the dreams he had formed. He had taken the first step up the ladder.

As a Clerk.

With the Boss' eye still upon him, and the Boss' interest in him more pronounced than ever, he went cheerfully to work. His observations, when as delivery boy he had furtively watched the tactics of the clerks, were now capital to him, and the Boss was heard to remark: "he takes naturally to the job." So he spoke to him encouragingly often and in leisure moments instructed him in the handling of customers and in methods of selling goods. Years went by and the boy was still there, though now transformed into a man. And with the transformation in stature there had come a transformation of ideals. His vision had been enlarged and he saw now the manager's chair, where the Boss, could be seen behind his desk listening to travelers, ordering goods and directing the conduct of his flourishing business. It was not a covetous gaze. He only knew that he would fit himself for the place by watching the Boss, so that he would be ready when the call came. He KNEW it would come, and it came.

As Manager.

Once there, his ambition, formed years before on his dreary and cold delivery trips, rested for a time. With all the energy that was in him, he went to his new work and endeavored, always to make the business greater than it was. And because of the compelling force he threw into the work the trade did grow, and rapidly. He conquered all the intricacies of the work. The Boss himself, now prosperous, saw that he could rest for a while from his labors. He did so, and the business went on and on as a smooth running piece of machinery.

Downfall of the Boss.

And now the gaze must be directed to the Boss himself if the end of the tale is to be told. In his hours of ease he found it good to forget all he knew about the trade which had made his ease possible. He grew lazy, but the money still poured into his coffers. And soon too, his good wife conceived the idea that she did not hold her proper place in society. She demanded that he move to a more fashionable locality. Alas! the transplanting was the beginning of the end. Released from the store surroundings which had held him as by a chain for so many years, the Boss began to spend more and more of his time down town in the haunts of boon companions. The wife grieved and sought the reason. She soon found the fault lay in the ABILITY of the manager of the store, their erstwhile delivery boy. So she brought pressure to bear upon the Boss to rid himself of his manager, and himself take up the reins of business.

But a Little While.

It came just before Christmas and iron entered into the soul of the ex-manager. He told himself all men were false and that there was no justice in the world. But destiny seeing all things, was guiding him aright. Now that he had time to look about him he saw that other men, once clerks, were prospering in business for themselves. He sought OPPORTUNITY, ambition once more strong within him, and soon he was located in a little store all his own! a Boss. The last I heard of him he was doing wonderfully well, and was casting about him for larger quarters and bigger trade.

That was noble, good ambition rightly served.

The old Boss, back in harness, found that the life he had lived had weakened his former shrewd instincts. His business failed, and soon he found himself a bankrupt, shorn of all his goods and the respect of his fellows. He had squandered the means of serving ambition and both become a failure. Opportunity comes to all.

NOTES.

Bananas are enjoying a large trade at all centres.

Watermelons have made their appearance in Chicago at high prices.

Canadian strawberries will not probably be ready until about the 15th or 20th of June.

The California lemon output this year is estimated at 7,000 cars, the largest in the history so far.

The first car of Florida peaches has been received in New York. They are selling at high prices.

On Friday, Apr. 28, a box of California cherries, the first of the season brought $1.00 in New York. On the next Monday two boxes averaged $7.25, a loss of $92.75 a box. On the basis of 2,200 boxes to the car, the drop in the cherry market within a week amounted to $205,905 per car.

NOT TO SELL RETAIL.

Calgary Wholesalers Meet Wishes of the Retail Body.

Calgary, Alta., May 11.—The retail section of the Calgary Board of Trade recently adopted a resolution, condemning the practice among wholesalers of selling to private parties, such as hotels, restaurants, hospitals, ranches and their own employees. It was decided to take the matter up with the wholesalers and ask their co-operation in removing the evils. As a result, already sixteen wholesalers have replied that they wish to protect the interests of the retail merchant and that they will not sell retail, as it is not their business and that they in so doing would violate the very principle for which the wholesale houses stand.

THE DEPARTMENT STORE.

One Consumer Gives Version of Why Trade Goes This Way.

"I have been looking into this large departmental store question of late," said a consumer recently "to see just what so many merchants are complaining about. I find that price is not the only magnet that attracts the trade to them. Their principal attractions are cleanliness, brightness, good service and good delivery coupled with plenty of proper advertising. But the big stores have no patent on these. Any merchant can have them."

These stores take particular care in the selection of their clerks, as well as their goods. They provide every service possible for customers while in the store. They are obliging. If a customer buys ten cents worth and hands a ten dollar bill to pay, they are not met with the curt remark: "Is that the smallest you have?" They make the change just as pleasantly as if the purchase had been nine dollars.

"They guarantee satisfaction. If goods purchased do not suit when taken home, the customer may exchange them. They have rest rooms and cooling drinks for the tired customer.

These are all things that are appreciated by the customer and which prove just as much of a drawing card as price. And as for their imaginary low prices, they consist more in the way the goods are advertised than in any real reduction from ordinary prices."

TO PUSH NEW NUTS.

The new crop of Brazil nuts have arrived on the market and now is the time for the dealer to push them instead of waiting until when they are old and staler. Brazil nuts, and nearly all nuts for that matter, have a food value that makes a good talking point for them and the fact that these are the first of the new crop can also be used in pushing their sales. Many grocers have the mistaken idea that nuts are a Christmas food only. Eggs are an Easter food, but that does not stop the dealer from pushing them day in and day out. It is the same with nuts. They should have a steady trade during the whole year.

The grocers in the east end of Hamilton will all close on Wednesday afternoons during the summer. Some of them would like to see this rule general the whole year around.

G. E. Springstead, Crown Point, Hamilton, has moved into new premises.

The Grocer's Encyclopedia—The Raisin

A Few Points of General Interest in Connection With the Growth, Picking, Curing and Packing of This Most Popular Food Product—The Relative Food Value Compared With Apples, Bananas, Eggs, Fish and Other Lines.

Raisins undoubtedly possess a relatively high food value.

One pound of them are said to represent a food value equal to each of the following: Six pounds of apples; five pounds of bananas; four and one-fourth pounds of potatoes; one pound of bread; four pounds of milk; four and three-fourth pounds of fish; two pounds of eggs, and one and one-third pounds of beef. They also have an important medicinal value in their laxative effect.

Raisins are simply dried grapes and although there are hundreds of varities of table and wine grapes, there are only a few suitable for raisins. Those that are made into raisins are the fleshy varieties which develop abundant, saccharine matter.

Cultivated in Spain.

Raisin grapes are most extensively cultivated around Denia, in Spain. While in most producing countries, the raisins are dried in the sun, this cannot be done in Denia on account of the climatic changes, and the grapes are therefore dipped into hot lye, made by dissolving the alkali out of wood ashes and quicklime with water, and then adding a pint of olive oil and a handful of salt to each four gallons.

Raisins are also grown in Greece, Italy, Southern France, Turkey and Persia, while California produces over 150,000,000 pounds annually, an amount equal to one-third of the world's total output.

Californian Process.

The process of making raisins in California is very simple. The picking of the grapes commences the first of September and is done for the most part by hundreds of Japanese who are handled in crews by Japanese contractors. The gathering, drying and handling of the crop on trays is done for a stipulated sum per ton. The grape clusters, many of them weighing two pounds or more, are carefully cut from the vines and laid upon trays. These trays hold about twenty pounds of fresh fruit, which will make from seven to eight pounds of cured fruit.

Sunshine Only Agency.

After being filled, the trays are conveyed to the drying ground, consisting merely of a large vacant track, no appliances being necessary to the curing process. California's climatic conditions are such as to make it unnecessary to hurry the drying, and there is no other agency employed but sunshine. Since there are no dews in that section of the country the raisin trays are left out day and night until the curing is completed. They are then removed to the sweatroom which is built as air tight as possible. There they become equalized in the degree of dryness and are then ready for packing.

Manner of Packing.

While a large number are packed in bulk in boxes which generally contain about 28 pounds, a considerable percentage are seeded and sent out to the markets in this condition.

Raisin seeders are marvels of mechanical dexterity and the fruit passes between the spiked rollers and is relieved of its many seeds with a rapidity that is wonderful. The necessity of seeding raisins in the home was in former years one of the most serious drawbacks to the more general use of the fruit in culinary operations, but this is now done away with for the housewife who so wishes, although the sale of bulk unseeded raisins is still large.

Increasing Sales.

The information given here should be of great value to the merchant in the increasing of his sales in this line. The knowledge of their relative food value is one point that should be urged upon the customer, while even the information about their growth and curing may be made of use. The dealer who finds out some new methods by which raisins may be used should be able to use such recipes in making the sales of this fruit.

WHEN SYSTEM DRIVES.

Sometimes a merchant after a tiresome day's work feels like letting the compiling of the records for the day's business go. It is then that system seems a burden. But the wise man knows that it will pay him to keep his business and how it compares with other all times tell the standing of his business and how to compare it with other years.

Crescent BM&Co. TRADE MARK. Brand

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

"Crown Brand"

made an extensive increase last year. This increase was due to three causes:

FIRST, Extensive advertising—the bill-boards from coast to coast are telling the people about "Crown Brand."

SECOND, the quality of "Crown Brand"—the user who once tries it comes back for more.

THIRD, (and by no means least important) the grocer's margin of profit in "Crown Brand" is all it should be.

Your individual sales should have been more. Were they? Let people know you're selling "Crown Brand" Corn Syrup; GET YOUR SHARE.

NOTHING BETTER

THE REASON MacLAREN'S IMPERIAL PRODUCTS have attained the position they have on the shelves of the wholesale and retail grocers and in the homes of the consumers is that in their production the quality has been always considered first.

Another reason is that their quality has never been stinted to meet the price, but on the other hand it has been the quality that has controlled the price and on this basis Imperial Products have held their high position as quality products and at the same time the price has been such that they can be sold at popular and profitable prices.

Did He Hypnotize You?

While ALL traveling salesmen are usually "good fellows" some are better than others—hats off, gentlemen, to the keen representative of our mutual interests !

But keep a tight grip on your pocketbook when that slickest one of all comes in, the "hypnotizer" who, for his personal gain persuasively urges "just a trial order."

Be guided by the name and the fame rather than by the looks and the crooks. Think of the fly-specked back numbers that you may have to take into inventory at the close of your business year and "Don't be hypnotized !"

THERE are very few articles that look more alike than two cakes of laundry soap. The wrappers, the shape, the size and even the weight of each may be the same, and when you look at them together you wonder why one sells well and the other doesn't. Same way with men. You see a man who has made a million and has the confidence of the whole country, and in most ways he looks as much like the ordinary individual as two cakes of soap. But you've got to cut his head open to see where the difference lies, and you've got to put SURPRISE in the wash tub to see why it holds its present place among Canadian consumers. Once you do this the whole thing is clear to your mind; for while it looks like other soap, the distinction is in the QUALITY.

2 in 1 Shoe Polish

Creates New Business

For the Grocer

As a rapid selling preparation 2 in 1 is ahead of all others. The general use and popular approval of 2 in 1 have firmly established it as

The demand for 2 in 1 is active all seasons of the year, and it is the most extensively advertised shoe polish on the market.

No Turpentine in this

The quick, brilliant shine that is given by 2 in 1 makes it an immediate favorite with new users. Old friends are fast friends, because 2 in 1 never rots the leather nor leaves a disagreeable odor on the shoes.

WINDSOR TABLE SALT

Have you ever had a customer ask, by name, for any other brand of table salt but Windsor?

We venture to say you have not.

But every grocer knows scores of women who ask for, and insist on getting, Windsor Table Salt.

Because Windsor Salt is pure salt—all salt—that never cakes or hardens—that shows no trace of grit or bitterness—it has come to be the only salt used in nine out of every ten Canadian homes.

WINDSOR DAIRY SALT

Countless tests have proved it—scores of Fairs have demonstrated it—that to make the best butter Windsor Dairy Salt must be used.

Practically every butter prize awarded at the Fairs last Fall went to those who used Windsor Dairy Salt.

The cheese-makers who understand their business best have settled, almost to a man, on Windsor Cheese Salt.

They say it dissolves slowly, salts the curd evenly, and makes a smooth, rich cheese that will "keep."

Are you catering to this steady and insistent demand for WINDSOR Salt?

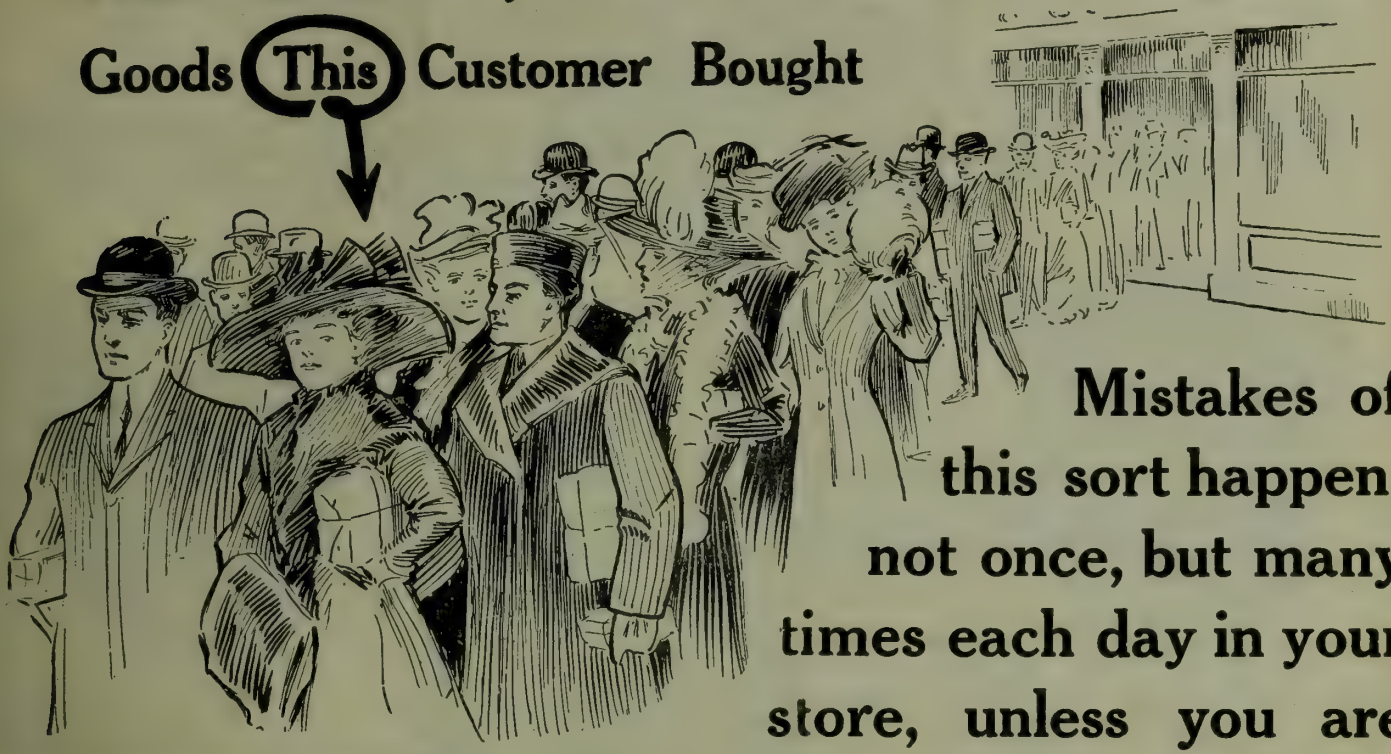
By no means least among the reasons for its great popularity are the speed and ease with which it is prepared for the table. It requires no soaking. In fifteen minutes you can produce a pudding, that in flavor, nutriment and appetizing appearance would suit the most exacting taste.



MINUTE TAPIOCA is made in a factory where it is given unequalled attention to see that it comes to you absolutely pure.

MINUTE TAPIOCA is economical and decidedly good value in every way. Put up in attractive packages for grocers who cater to a gilt-edged trade. To your women customers be sure and speak of the delicious dessert to be made in fifteen minutes.

Some Clerk May Have Forgotten to Charge the Goods This Customer Bought

Mistakes of this sort happen, not once, but many times each day in your store, unless you are using a National Cash Register.

Successful Merchants

Put a Receipt in Every Parcel because it is the only way to Protect the Merchant

Protect the Clerk, and

against the mistakes, carelessness, forgetfulness, or dishonesty which cause constant disputes, loss of trade, loss of profits and all round dissatisfaction.

The only method of issuing a receipt that cannot be altered, automatically as each sale is recorded, is with the National Cash Register.

YOU go to considerable expense to draw customers, maintain an attractive store and hire clerks. Each sale you make represents an actual profit to you---it is placed right within your grasp---no your counter. And then it may be turned into a dead loss in one second!

You can prevent that---you can be sure that you get every cent that belongs to you, and hold and protect it when once it is in your hands with a National Cash Register.

The National Cash Register will also tell you at a glance at any time exactly how many sales have been made up to the minute, the actual money received, the number of charge accounts and the amount charged. It will tell you which of your clerks makes the most sales---which clerks make mistakes, so that you make them all more careful and useful.

A National Cash Register is as Necessary to You as Your Bank

For each protects the money, the profits you have worked so hard to get. A million storekeepers who are using National Cash Registers tell us that they would not do business without them--could not in fact. A National Cash Register combines the ever watchful eye of the proprietor with machine-like accuracy in attending to details. It will help you to serve more customers in less time and do away with the delays that sap profits.

HOW DOES YOUR PRODUCT REACH THE CONSIGNEE?

Do you wish it to reach your customer in a broken, splintered case, battered and bruised?

Do you want the first impression to be a bad one?

Are you fond of negotiations over replacement of damaged goods, and return freight charges?

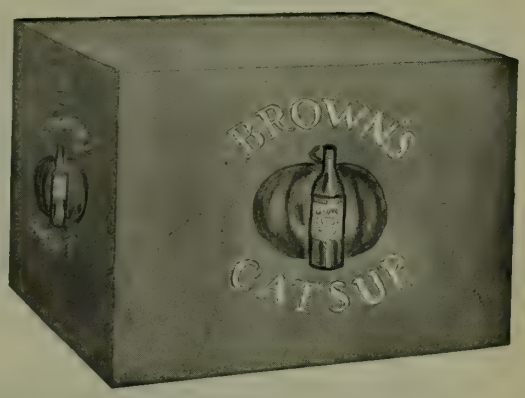
Or do you wish your product to arrive as clean and fresh as when it was packed—a condition to invite further trade?

Don't you want your printed label on the package to be thoroughly legible, and the consignee's name to be clear and readable? Then use

"H and D"
Corrugated Fibre Board Boxes

They will surely protect your shipment against water, damp and damage, and will save on each shipment the unnecessary freight expense of wood.

No matter what you have for shipment, we can design a better, cheaper and more satisfactory packingcase than you are now using—a case that will save from 10% to 87% in freight charges, 25% to 50% in packers' time, and 90% of your storage space.



A request to have us design a specimen case specially suited to your needs, will put you under no OBLIGATION. We will be only too glad to do so! Write us what you ship, and ask for free booklet

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

If you order Pyramids and receive a device similar in appearance, but not labelled as such—send them back,

"Pyramids" have a long and wide permanently sticky coating of paste, prepared from a secret formula; the paste could be imitated by a cheap varnish preparation, but it would quickly dry out and make the article useless as a fly catcher.

By insisting upon having "Pyramids" you will help to maintain your reputation of handling only goods with recognized merit.

We handle the entire output for Canada of the Pyramid Fly Catcher Factory. They make no other similar device.

CONSTRUCTIVE SALESMANSHIP — ITS DEFINITION.

This is a Constructive Salesmanship number. When it was first conceived, months ago, there was born at that moment the desire on the part of The Canadian Grocer to have representative dealers from every province in Canada—men who are daily creating demand in customers for goods that return a good fair margin of profit—set down their methods in black and white, in the hope that somewhere a retailer or two might see and profit thereby. This thing has been done. Some thirty-five good counter men, situated in all parts of the Dominion met the appeal half-way, and sent in their ideas. The following pages will show why nine men have been awarded nine medals for excelling in this. The culling process was not easy, and it is only fair to say of those to whom no reward was given that there was little separating the winners from the losers. It is a pleasure indeed to be able to say this.

Sheldon has defined salesmanship as "the art of inducing people to buy product at a profit." It did not take Sheldon long to state his definition; it does not take long to write it; but it DOES take long to KNOW it. There are a great many grocers in Canada to-day who are adepts at retailing staples, but to whom the finer arts of selling other goods at a profit is as unknown as is the writing on an Egyptian tomb.

Constructive Salesmanship is beyond all this again. As the name implies, it is the constructing of all the conditions that go to make salesmanship possible into a perfect structure. It is the compelling of one essential to have a definite relation to the one next in line. It demands that the window shall attract and entice people into the store and to the counters to learn more; it insists that when the prospective customer crosses the threshold the displays and arrangements within must please the eye and promote a feeling of security; it compels that the clerks be able to explain without effort or causing annoyance, all about the goods there to be sold.

Literally, it means that all these things must be arranged to make the customer feel that "here is not a place where money is taken, but given voluntarily, in return for courteous treatment and painstaking service." It is the solidifying of the many little things into the one perfect whole." That is constructive salesmanship, and it is that which has been sought for in all the replies sent to the competition. When it has been done, it is always seen that reward has followed effort, and the men who have won to that position have achieved something as important in their eyes as the throwing out of a twin line of steel is in the eyes of the constructive railway genius.

TRADE WITH THE BRITISH WEST INDIES.

The Royal commission on trade relations between Canada and the British West Indies does not seem to have had the effect of inducing any considerable volume of new business between these two sections of the British Empire. It is a pity. This Dominion of Canada has much that could be used in the Islands, and those little tropical centres have many lines that should be welcomed in this country. Molasses from Barbadoes comes in, it's true, but there are comparatively few other products handled regularly, into Canadian ports. Some fruit is shipped to maritime centres on the boats plying between the countries, but even in this there have been men who have objected, because it did not always arrive in first-class condition.

It has been stated repeatedly that West Indies were standing with open arms to welcome trade with Canada. Canadians who spend some of their time in the delightful climate that is theirs, in our winter season, come back dilating on the intense patriotism of the people there. And yet nothing seems to come of it all.

The United States is surely and steadily gaining control of the islands in a commercial way. They are so close, and we so far away. The fruits and tropical products shipped to the ports of the neighboring republic have not the time to spoil, and bring good prices on their markets.

THE PASSING OF THE STREET STANDS?

It is reported that one of the Solons in the Toronto city council intends introducing at the next business session of that body an amendment to the civic by-law, designed to prevent retailers from displaying goods on the sidewalk.

As only the bare fact is contained in the notice of motion it is not possible to know the real reason behind the move, but two things are to be assumed. The first of these is that in the past dealers have been inclined to abuse the privilege by blocking the thoroughfares with goods for hours at a time. The second is that the aldermen have become imbued with the idea that the health of the citizens who purchased the goods displayed outside was endangered by the flying dust and microbes supposed to be present in every city street.

On the face of things this proposed amendment would appear altogether too drastic, and just another piece of municipal legislation provoked by the sins of the few to the detriment of the many who place on their stands on the sidewalk only such goods as dust cannot affect to any extent. But if it is discussed, it will probably have the effect of having the sinners "take thought on their ways," and undoubtedly will cause those merchants who make a literal junk shop of the pavement to work a change in that policy.

SELLING LILIES AS A SIDELINE.

A splendid example of salesmanship, entailing the faculty of recognizing and grasping opportunities, came to light in one of the large Canadian cities at Easter time.

This was a case of a grocer who became for the time being a florist. His place of business is located on one of the high-class residential streets of this particular city, and there was no florist's shop within striking distance of his establishment. That is how he came to observe his opportunity, and this is how he worked it out.

He made an arrangement with one of the large florists to supply him as demanded, with supplies of Easter lilies. Of the first consignment he made a pleasing window display, so that all his fashionable customers could see how he could supply their wants, and awaited developments. They came. The residents of the neighborhood knew the danger attendant upon the bringing of these delicate plants from downtown stores, and went to him to have their wants supplied.

He had expected to fill a few orders — probably thought he would be able to clear out the original supply and a repeat, but by the time the selling was over, he made the startling discovery that he had sold exactly ONE THOUSAND PLANTS. That WAS Salesmanship.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

There must be helpful hints in this spring number for every reader of Canadian Grocer. It should not be discarded until it has been fully inspected.

There was once a man who boasted that he thought of everything. He failed in business, and it is to be supposed he even thought of that.

Millers have advanced rolled oats again by twenty cents a barrel. This is the second increase in a month, and is attributed to the strength of the oat market. But it would appear at the moment that the export demand for this cereal had fallen off a little, with a consequent weakening of prices.

An effort has been made in the compilation of this issue to print only such articles as are calculated to be of benefit to Canadian Grocer readers in every department of business. It is a big number, and is profusely illustrated, and, we think, is well worth the trouble of keeping on file for ready reference. Henry Johnson, Jr., has contributed two articles dealing with two sides of business management. Other men from all sections of the country have sent in their views on the running of establishments that will surely be of help to other merchants in some measure, no matter where they may happen to be located.

CONSTRUCTIVE SALESMANSHIP

D. M. FRASER : WINNIPEG

GOLD MEDALIST IN CLASS "C."

Loyalty, Integrity and Ability—Recognition of the Selling Values of His Windows, and also of Interior Display—Capacity to Sell Goods that Have Not Been Asked For—Tendency to be Always Anxious to Learn

FROM one of the spacious business establishments located on Main street, in Winnipeg, comes the following, illustrative of the methods of D. M. Fraser, a clerk in the store of J. A. McKerchar. As might be assumed from the name, he is evidently a product of Auld Scotia, and the sterling interpretation of loyalty he places upon his position as well as the sturdy determination to both add to the business of his "master," and to his own standing as well, runs all through his story. It contributed not a little to his being granted the gold medal for the big cities.

Believes in the Window.

Mr. Fraser believes in the power of the window as a selling agent. He says that during Easter week they had a special display of hams and bacon attractively laid out there and also a quantity of fresh-churned creamery butter. This was surrounded by some splendid lilies which added a charm to the provisions in being appropriate to the season. The sales in these two lines were increased considerably as a result of that arrangement.

He has also displayed new goods never before offered to the public with a large portion of success as a reward. He cites a particular instance in pointing out how until recently one special breakfast food enjoyed a large sale in Winnipeg. A new line was brought to the attention of his "boss" in common with other grocers of the city. He was enthusiastic about the proposition because of its benefits to himself and to his patrons for this was a domestic product and as the duty was saved it meant considerable difference to the housewife. The window was well prepared. A few attractive bills were placed at the top corners of the display so as not to detract from the arrangement, and this prominence along with personal recommendation quickly boosted the new line into popular favor with the customers of the store. Now it is in steady demand.

Non-Advertised Goods.

His window has also been used to sell goods never advertised by the manufacturer to any of their customers.

In illustrating this he recalls a case of a cleaning preparation which entered the market not long ago, and allowed the retailers a fair margin of profit. They handled two lines of cleaners, and the one last introduced was the best one from the proprietor's point of view. So this was given a display. The stuff was tastefully arranged, a color scheme was worked in, and drew attention to the store. Enquiries came rapidly as to the nature of the new product, and on its claims and price being explained, a good demand for it was soon created, and still holds good.

Values Show Cards.

The window is dressed every week usually and twice during the fruit season, and Mr. Fraser is a firm believer in show cards and price tickets. He holds that goods are displayed in the window that they may be sold.

"If a price is not stated," said he, "it is not just to the man who takes care and interest in displaying the goods nor profitable to the proprietor of the store. People who are not customers will daily pass a window that does not shout out its message. It is the housewife that looks at a window more than any other person, and consequently prices attract her more than anything else. She perhaps does not appreciate display as much as that which deals with her purse. Care should be taken not to put in tickets that are too large or too many of them. Every article to which attention is to be directed is to be clearly marked as to price and also description given if this is necessary."

Introducing Specialties.

This Winnipeg clerk also is stronly convinced that systematic interior display pays. As he puts it, the shelves contain the goods in every day demand, and they use as much counter space as convient for displaying new lines, believing this to be the best possible medium for introducing specialities. The customer sees the goods; she probably examines them, and desires to be informed about them. When the counter is the only thing that divides customer and salesman on such an occasion, sales are easily made," he says.

"Sometimes," he continues, "when the counter space is all taken up, and there are several lines I want to treat in this way, I find it good policy to have these goods placed out of the way but near at hand. So, while speaking with a customer I await the opportunity to mention these and just put my hand down and bring out a package."

He says that it only takes a few words to be able to secure the customer's favorable attention, and for that reason considers it important to be able to place his hand on what he wants to talk about at the right time. But as sometimes clerks forget that goods are placed there for that purpose, and he thinks it a good policy to have the men constantly reminded that the goods are there.

Interior Display.

Mr. Fraser believes in displaying goods near the front door and tries to have the variety so shown as large as possible. To do this he builds attractive packages on glass shelves, has revolving china stands, and encased frame work for displaying dried fruits. He also has has wire stands for vegetables and fresh fruits, and wicker work baskets for exhibiting eggs. He believes in the efficiency of biscuit show cases, and has one showing a variety of eighteen kinds of confections. Many lines of goods are sold by these mediums, he considers, that otherwise would not have been known at all, nor asked for.

In his store they always ask customers to buy goods that are not asked for. He has found that it is easy to sell a manufactured article that is highly advertised when he wants to, and it has also been his experience that he can sell a similar non-advertised article should he desire to do so, if it produces a better profit to the establishment.

Creating Demand.

Demonstrating this, he mentions one particular food stuff in the establishment, of which they keep two brands.

On one of these, competition compelled the sale at such a price that merely a nominal profit resulted. In the case of the other, a good article which went out under their own name, a good profit was provided.

"A lady came in," Mr. Fraser relates, "and asked what brands of this particular food stuff we had in stock. I brought over a packet of our own brand, simply remarking that it was of the best possible quality, and naming the price. She wanted to know if that was the only line we had, and enquired for the other brand. I replied that we had that brand, but pointed out that most of the customers of the establishment bought the one I had first introduced. She had confidence in my selling talk, and took the package home to test it."

Using the Telephone.

In this Winnipeg store there is of course a telephone, and it is used as a means of increasing sales, Mr. Fraser telling how. Only the best clerks are allowed to take orders on a telephone. The greatest possible attention is given. "This is made necessary," he thinks, "because the telephone is used to bring before the customer the latest arrival in all new goods. Care is taken to serve her just in the same manner as if she were in the store, and an endeavor is also made to give her the advantages of any special price prevailing."

Much additional business also comes the way of the store, Mr. Fraser says, through their suggesting to customers goods that have not been asked for. It is his opinion that many customers think a grocer's stock is confined to certain definite lines of goods. "Often," he says, "in looking aver orders from regular customers, I notice that they never give my store a chance to supply certain lines of things. I knew they required them, and by drawing their attention to the fact that the lines were carried in the store, we were enabled to secure their order in full, and not in part as before." They use no newspaper space for advertising, nor do they issue circulars. The only method they use to bring their goods to the attention of the public is personal appeal and salesmanship.

Believes in Equipment.

He believes in the power of equipment to facilitate the handling of customers. They have installed a ham and bacon slicer, electric coffee grinder, computing scales, cash register, cheese cutter, display racks, biscuit cases, fruit stands, confectionery cases, cases for fancy boxes of chocolates and novelties.

He believes that all these innovations work for regularity, accuracy, the saving of time and thrift, and the increase of sales.

Their delivery is effected by horse and wagon. There are three deliveries per day to each district, and these are made at stipulated hours. An effort is made to adhere to these schedules as much as possible. There are, of course, special deliveries besides for express orders.

They have for their bookkeeping double entry system. The best features of it, Mr. Fraser says, are exactness and clearness. They are enabled to secure a full account of a customer's standing at a glance.

Reads Trade Journal.

The profits are figured on sales, because Mr. Fraser says, they can only arrive at a true profit after deducting general expenses, salaries, cost of deliveries, and all other details that have a bearing on the goods sold.

He is always seeking to add to his knowledge by studying the articles running in the trade magazines and in books. He reads the editorial and advertising sections of The Canadian Grocer for selling information. Anything dealing with the power of personality or salesmanship he has always found to have been of great benefit to him.

"I have always been able to sell goods recommended to my customers because I always made it a point that all my recommendations bear the hall-mark of genuiness," said he. "My customers depend on my word, and in good faith give them a fair and unprejudiced trial. I draw the attention of customers to new lines and include a demonstration of them. I would also allow a customer to experiment in her home with these goods. I always try to show her peculiar advantages and the saving in cost of each."

A sharp lookout they always keep for newcomers to the district.

GOLD MEDALIST IN CLASS "B."

Business Vision and the Necessary Faith and Capacity to carry it through—Personal Salesmanship—Ability to Forecast Markets—Knack as an Advertiser—Knowledge when Buying

OUT in Lethbridge, in sunny Alberta, N. B. Good, of the Good Co., has been transacting business in such a systematic manner that he has been deemed by the judges well worthy a position of honor in this contest. As retailer he has given a most comprehensive survey of the methods he has used in building up trade in both sections. All his ideas are clear-cut and it is quite evident that he has believed in them sufficiently to risk a considerable amount of money on their well-working or otherwise. There may be some of these with which other of our readers will not agree. The Good Co., however, has proved the efficiency of them and for that reason their survey at least will work harm to no one.

Selling Oranges.

Mr. Good certainly believes in the use of his window in displaying goods. He thinks it is a great business getter, and in naming an instance in substantiation of this he said that on one Saturday his firm sold twenty cases of oranges by having the window filled properly with these southern fruits. He adds that a large price ticket was used in conjunction with the display. He has also displayed new goods in that window never before offered to the public.

Introducing New Line.

Success has followed every effort. To put it into his own wards: "Our firm were enabled to secure the sole agency for a line of canned goods which had never been offered to the public before in the Lethbridge district. We filled the window with these goods and advertised them extensively in the Lethbridge evening paper and we have sold more canned goods this year than ever before. So marked was the effect of this sale, that people come in now of their own volition, and ask for that particular line of goods. The manufacturer had never advertised in this section."

For Interior Display.

He dresses his windows usually once a week, and he believes that show cards and price tickets are the proper thing to have in the window if the best results are to be obtained.

He also reposes implicit confidence in the value of systematic interior display. This is what he says: "On counters and shelves we place goods known to be of good value for the price, taking into consideration the fact that the margin of profit is fair. We also, where we can, give the preference to goods of which we have the sole agency for the district." And as opposed to this policy of display of goods he wants to sell, he outlines the policy he follows when seeking to avoid selling goods upon which competition has forced down the margin of profit to a level where he considers the money to be derived from handling is not sufficient.

Hides the Goods.

Speaking in this connection, Mr. Good says: "When any of our competitors cut the prices on a certain line of goods so that there is no legitimate profit left we simply hide all the goods we have of that line until the price cutting ceases."

Methods for playing up certain lines of goods near the front of the store are the subject of much thought in the management of this firm. Silent salesman for confectionery, bread and cakes, fancy mahogany stand for biscuits, a display stand, that can be raised and lowered, for fancy bottled goods, also a counter show case for displaying any new goods—all these go into service close to the street door. And while these things are considered of great value in drawing people on to ask questions, the element of salesmanship is always kept behind that the fullest advantage can be taken of this showing.

Buy Displayed Goods.

It has been the experience of Mr. Good that customers buy many goods they see displayed in the store, and especially of that class which is given prominent position on the counter show case or display stand.

He has installed dust-proof bin fixtures throughout the store to give the goods always a neat appearance, and in the provision department there is a curved, marble-top counter and two large oak finished refrigerators for the proper care of butter, eggs and cheese, lard and cured meats.

Personal Salesmanship.

Customers in that store are generally asked to buy goods not ordered by themselves. Mr. Good says that a manufactured article highly advertised can be disposed of more easily than another if they want to push it. But he adds that a similar non-advertised article can be readily sold if properly advocated which is done when it produces a better profit, and is of as good or better quality. "To do this well," he says, "the customer must have fullest confidence in the grocer. Then the goods can be sold, otherwise I would say that it would not be as easy."

In his case his customers evidently repose the greatest confidence in him because he goes on to recite a case in which he did sell goods that were not advertised, against goods that were.

Line Against Line.

He says: "This year Canadian canned peas were scarce and high in price, so with an eye to the future, we investigated a line of English goods and closed a deal early calling for ten cases of one hundred tins each. These cost us $1.15 a dozen, while early Junes were 25c a dozen more. One lady came in and asked us for early June peas, but when I showed her the two tins and explained to her the circumstances, she purchased the English line and now buys nothing else. We have had to order more of these."

Telephone Sales.

This Lethbridge man has a telephone of course, and increases his sales by means of it. He doesn't wait for his customers to call up, but when anything special develops in the store, he rings them up and tells them about it. Usually it is something for that particular day. One Saturday afternoon not long ago he bought fifteen cases of Oregon strawberries from the Express Company at $2 a case. To sell them that day it was necessary that the people know they had them, so personally Mr. Good became busy at the telephone and in an hour he had these strawberries all sold. Incidentally in that turnover he made the neat profit of $27.

He uses this incident to show that it is always possible to suggest goods to a customer with good results, provided the said customer has confidence in the dealer. He also believes that this policy of suggestion should be carefully followed out because often in talking of different lines the customer may be reminded of something she wanted to get but had temporarily forgotten.

How Advertising Pays Him.

He is an advertiser, but in nothing else but the newspaper. In speaking of this he tells of obtaining direct results from one of his ads. One day he anticipated in the newspaper the arrival of a shipment of corn on the cob, and he says that the next day his profits on these goods alone were three times the cost of the advertisement.

In another instance one hundred cases of cherries arrived at the store, and he placed an advertisement in the evening paper. Next day the cherries were cleared with a net profit of $30 or just thirty times the cost of the advertisement.

They tried circulars two or three times, but found them unsatisfactory; the city was too big. But Mr. Good is of the opinion that in smaller places where there are no daily papers this class of publicity would bring results. Out there though, the people take it for granted that a store using a circular was a cheap place and accordingly take no notice of it.

The Best Publicity.

"The best of all advertising," he says, "is to treat the customer the same as you would want to be treated yourself. We always give them the privilege of returning anything not satisfactory to them. We never misrepresent anything and by so doing I believe have made friends. They will tell their other friends which creates more new business."

Another thing he relies on is the power for good of having a special line or two that will bring customers, for that alone. His specialties are fruits and vegetables, and he thinks they are quite a drawing card in his part of the country. He would not tolerate advertising on hotel registers, bill boards and such like. To him publicity by the medium of the widest-circulated daily papers secures the best results for the money spent. Of course he changes the ads. daily.

Store Equipment.

Now as to store equipment and fixtures, the Good store is evidently dressed better than many. He says they have a meat slicer, an electric coffee mill, three computing scales, cash register, cheese cutter, a self measuring oil tank, electric wall and window fans, vegetable fountain in the window, three silent salesman, a grocery display stand, and dust-proof fixtures throughout. In speaking of the chief value of these he elaborates on the manner in which the meat slicer cuts in uniform size, thick or thin or medium slices, as preferred by the customer. The electric coffee mill, he has found, will grind a hundred pounds of coffee in about two hours. Formerly it used to take one man a whole day to do this, because it appears that the grinding of a hundred pounds of coffee is not an uncommon thing in this store. But now he points out the saving of time and mentions that the man can go about doing other things in the store, while the grinder is doing its work automatically. His computing scales, he says, have paid for themselves through the giving of accurate weights. The cash register has been of inestimable value for referring to in case of error or dispute. As to the dust-bin fixtures, Mr. Good believes that anyone who has ever used them will agree that they give a neat appearance to the store and insure the people absolutely clean groceries.

Regular Delivery.

The Good company have regular hours for delivery. They have two waggons. One leaves the store, say, at nine in the morning and the next at ten, and so on through the day. In that way they cover the entire city. To look after the accounts they use a loose leaf system. The best features of this which they mention are monthly statements in making out accounts as posted from the daily slips, synoptic for all daily transactions giving a complete record of everything that has taken place during the day.

Figuring Profits.

"As to profits we figure both ways, that is on cost gnd sale," explains Mr. Good, in speaking of his method of estimating in this line. "It makes no difference, for instance, whether you figure 20 per cent. profit on the selling price or 25 on the cost price. To my mind percentage should always be figured on the cost price, because then you would be working on the actual money laid out, not on the money received."

The average per cent. profit the Good Company aims to secure is 20 per cent. on the selling price, or 25 on the cost. They usually carry a stock valued at $6,000, without fixtures. They turn over this stock eleven and one half times a year, which totals up to a business verging on $70,000.

Tests Goods at Home.

His methods of learning more about goods in the store, or rather as much as he possibly can learn, is also quite effective. Said he: "Every time we get a new article in I open and test the goods personally, in most cases taking a sample home and having it properly tested there, before recommending it to the customers. All the clerks are notified of the outcome so that they may be able to speak intelligently about the goods they are selling."

He reads the editorial and adverising sections of The Canadian Grocer for selling information, and he says that among the benefits derived are the hints for the dressing of windows, treatment of customers, the talks on the value of system, and the information for advertising.

Extending Business.

Of the methods he uses for increasing sales, he says that if word reaches

We have a carload of Potatoes arriving some time this week from Shelburne, Ontario them of any new people coming to the city or district, he personally goes to see them. Especially is this the case if the newcomers are large buyers, and then he gets acquainted with the buyer. So also with a large concern of any kind. He sets forth the advantages these folks are sure to receive by dealing with them, and he says that in many cases the firms has gained good customers through following that method. He also makes it a point to be first if possible of all the stores in the district to handle fresh fruits and vegetables.

Buying Goods.

Describing the methods he uses in buying goods, he says: "All the buying is done by myself. I keep a complete record of the markets so as to be able to know whether goods are likely to go up or down in price, thereby in some instances saving many dollars. I might say that last year I was studying the markets on canned goods and from all the information I could get from trade papers and wholesalers, I came to the conclusion that canned goods would be from 15 to 20 p.c. higher in price in the fall than they were in the spring. Having an opportunity in June last to get the sole agency for the district, of a line of canned goods, and at a price almost as good as the others were giving the year previous, I closed a deal for 1,100 cases.

Satisfied as to Quality.

"I might further state," he adds, "that I had first satisfied myself that these goods were equal in quality to anything that the others put out, in fact to our idea they were better. We saved on this purchase alone about $500 which was a nice little profit in itself.

"I might also say that price book is kept where all the prices of everything we handle are set out for reference of anyone in the store. In this book we have the initial cost, the laid down cost, the jobbing price to people buying in large quantities, and the retail price so that anyone in the store can see in this book what we have in stock, the price in small quantities and the price in large quantities."

Handle in Car Lots.

"In fruit and produce we handle nearly everything in car lots, importing a lot of goods from the states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, also from British Columbia and Ontario. This puts us on a level with the wholesaler and we always manage to sell enough out of the car to our competitors, so that on our own goods which we retail we get both the wholesaler's and the retailer's profit. We never cut the price to our customers, always keeping on a level with the rest of the retailers, for we sell a lot of goods to the retailer as well as to the consumer, and in order to do so we have to allow him a legitimate profit on the goods.

How the Printer and the Grocer Stand

Two Reasons Why Dealer an d Newspaper Proprietor in Small Towns and Villages Sho uld Stand Together to Combat The Mail Order Grievance—Va lue of the Local Newspaper, and The Power of Local Advertising.

THE merchant and the printer in the small town should be partners standing together in the effort to offset the damaging workings of the mail order houses in the large cities.

In this way they not only benefit themselves but are also working for the good of the town in which they live, for it is undoubtedly true that while the mail order houses are a direct drawback to the merchant in the small town and village, they also constitute a detriment to the town from which the citizens send their money away to enrich their coffers. Therefore, both the merchant and the printer have two excellent reasons for endeavoring to combat the mail order house. First, because of the benefit it will be to themselves; secondly, the benefit it will give to the town. If the regard which they have for their town will not put them into a fighting spirit, surely their own interests will.

It is found that the editor of the local paper is generally very greatly concerned over the welfare of the town in which he resides and that he stands ready to co-operate with the merchant in anything that is for the benefit of their town. In the smaller towns and villages, the local newspaper is the best advertising medium that the merchant can use, and the one that he should work in the effort to keep trade at home. Other branches of advertising may be good but should not be used, until you believe you are working the local newspaper for all it is worth. Therefore let the merchant and printer join forces in the effort to keep trade at home.

People read the newspaper for more than the news which it contains. They also look for the advertisements and generally read them very closely. When you pick up your trade paper, don't you look through the advertisements and scan them very carefully too, for you undoubtedly believe that there might be something there of value to you. It is for the same reason that the newspaper reader looks over the advertisements.

The fact that advertisements are considered as valuable by the reader is generally conceded. It is a safe bet that if a paper contained no advertisements that it would have no women subscribers, and remember the women are the chief buyers.

Of course, it is necessary that you have good advertisements in order to have them read, but that is not the point. The main object is to get the spirit awakened so that you will put forth your best efforts in this necessary work.

A store than cannot develop a good business with proper newspaper advertising lacks in some of the other essentials of business success.

DID THEY GET THEM?

A southern grocer who advertised a special sale of fruits ended with "Come early and avoid the rush. Remember that the early bird gets the worms."

WARNING FROM ENGLAND.

Here is a letter sent on from Norwich in England, calling upon The Canadian Grocer to warn its readers against the evils of co-operation:

"Editor Canadian Grocer:

"I don't know if it is true that you have no Co-operative Stores in Canada. I was talking to the president of a local Society some little while back, about a cousin of his out there who keeps a store. I said: 'He hasn't got any Co-operation to fight against.' He said: 'I don't think they have any there.'

"I hope that is true. I can assure you they have proved the ruin of thousands of honest, hard-working traders here in England and Scotland. I have just read in the Standard of Empire, a brief account of an address given at the Canadian Club at Halifax by a Mr. Maxwell, of the Scottish Co-operation Society. As this advocate of the high Christian principle of elimination of the individual trader may be stumping the country, sowing the poisonous seed of one of the greatest evils that ever cursed the old country, see that your people are not fooled as we have been in the old country. The evils we have here are the Co-operative Stores and the huge Limited Companies. May Canada never be cursed with either of them.

ARTHUR HOPWOOD : NEW MICHEL, B.C.

GOLD MEDALIST IN CLASS "A."

Ability to Start Out in a Small Place and Make Everything Work to His Advantage—Ingenuity in Thinking Out Original Advertising Schemes — Salesmanship of First Quality.

ARTHUR HOPWOOD, whose selling methods are given in this story is established in the little village of New Michel, in B.C. It is because of the ability shown in such a small place that he has been awarded the premier honor in class "A."

He was formerly window and stand dresser and order man to Trites, Wood Co., Ltd., of Michel, and probably for that reason he is an absolute believer in the value of his window for displaying goods. He is of the opinion that, in every way, a smart clean window appeals to the public and that a man who has his window dressed often and tastefully with seasonable goods draws the people to the store.

"The next thing you know," he says, "they are asking for some article they have seen there, and soon you have a nice little order."

This, especially when the interior display is in keeping with the arrangement made in the window. He gives one instance in a display of fruit. He put a sign card pointing out the healthful qualities of the goods and says that splendid results followed. He dresses his window once a week, and twice on special occasions, but he never crowds it at any time.

Likes Show Cards.

Show cards he believes in. He thinks that an artistic card devoted to some article he needs to push or which he thinks appeals to the public at the time, is a good thing. But he seldom puts a price ticket in the window on an article he thinks appears good to a customer.

"When that is the case," he says, "it is not long before they are inside asking the price where it can be courteously explained, and the good points of the line outlined to them."

He considers that his windows are to entice people inside. He looks upon them as a fisherman does the fly on his hook. He only prices an article when he needs to clear them.

For Interior Display.

He also is a believer in systematic interior display. On his counters and shelves he changes his goods as the seasons come round. When this letter was sent in he was featuring canned fruits and vegetables, soups, cocoa, etc. This month, he says, salmon, sardines, lunch tongues, ham loaves,—things the fisherman or picnicer want, will be given preference.

And there are times when lines go out of sight beneath the counter. He does this, he says, because he considers himself there to sell goods for a living profit. These he keeps to the front and in a handy place.

Pushes the Other Line.

As for the others he keeps them but if there is another article with a better profit, and of similar quality that he can honestly recommend, he does so. And moreover he endeavors to push it until it becomes a standard article.

All kinds of small tables, racks, steps and small slabs of marble for cream and cheese he uses for displaying near the front of his store. His vegetable racks he changes as often as he has time, usually three or four times a week. And he is a believer in plenty of clean oilcloth and white paper. "People buy the goods they see displayed in the store," he says.

Personal Salesmanship Foundation.

But it is on lines of personal salesmanship that Mr. Hopwood hopes to build up his business. He is not averse to asking a customer to buy any line of goods they may not have asked him for. He can sell a manufactured article that happens to be highly advertised more easily than the other when he wants to. But he says that when the margin of profit on such line dwindles down until it is almost out of sight, he can unearth some line of similar quality, but returning a larger profit and induce his customers to buy.

The Friendly Talk.

In this connection, he says: "I solicit every day and if a customer orders a certain line of tea or any other article, and I think that by a friendly talk I can sell her an article more beneficial to both of us I have no hesitation in doing so. I cannot call to mind any particular case, but I am following this procedure constantly. I am on good business terms with my customers, and I never hesitate. They place their confidence in me and I respect the same always, considering myself a public servant."

Uses the Telephone.

Although New Michel is but a small village Mr. Hopwood has a telephone which he has been able to use to good advantage. In this connection he says:

"Generally I make use of the 'phone when I want to land a good hotel or boarding house order, or for that matter any time I think I can place some goods direct from the car. It saves labor in hauling and storing, especially with potatoes and such lines."

He continually suggests to customers the advisability of purchasing goods not asked for, and finds that it saves them many a trip when they are busy. Also very tritely he remarks that "if he didn't jog their memory his competitor would before him."

Advertisement in Rooms.

This man does not believe in newspaper advertising, but only because the town happens to be too small. He uses circulars, however, and finds them to go well. Sometimes, he says, the china and the glass circular produces good results. And he also issues one twice a month announcing specials or seasonable goods or anything that happens to be moving slowly.

But he has a more novel scheme than that. It is a standing advertisement in the hotels. He considers this the only way available to induce business in such a town as where he happens to be located. He finds that it helps a lot. In one hotel he has an ad. attractively framed and placed in every room, and he says he is always getting trade through it. This is something that might well be copied in other small centres of the country.

His Store Equipment.

Now Mr. Hopwood, so strongly convinced of the merits of display in both window and interior, is also a believer in the use of all equipment calculated to save time and money in the store. He has had installed a ham and bacon slicer, coffee grinder with dynamo, computing scales, totalling cash register, open cheese cutter, sliding bin fixtures, and electric light. "These are," he said, "all absolutely essential to any store run on up-to-date and economic lines." He also has a bill carrier wire system.

The Delivery System.

His goods are all delivered by teams. Every parcel is counted and the number of them is on the bill, also sacks, if any, and a delivery book with all particulars is handed to the driver who has to sign the same before starting out. Accordingly he checks his load by it.

He uses a loose leaf bookkeeping and turns his stock over twice in a year.

In seeking to learn more about the goods he handles he diligently reads the Canadian Grocer, and also studies a number of technical books dealing with practical work in his business. Also, whenever a traveler who happens to know all about the article he is selling, drops in, he always tries to glean as much information from him as possible. In The Grocer he finds particularly interesting the talks with clerks and different articles and illustrations. He looks forward to it every week, and says: "Every issue teaches me something."

Wears White Coat.

Coming back to the personal salesmanship department, Mr. Hopwood says that he can sell goods he recommends to his customers. He has been, enabled to do this because they have placed their confidence in him and know that he never pushes an expensive article on anyone who cannot afford the same.

He adds: "Of course they would often buy, but it is poor policy to induce people to purchase what you know at the end of the week or month they cannot pay for. Besides, if they leave a balance they shun you and go elsewhere with their ready cash. Cut your garment according to the cloth, and do the same with a customer."

In seeking to develop his trade this man wears a clean coat and apron always, and keeps himself well shaven.

Here also is another bit of business philosophy: "Never pass a customer on the sidewalk without a pleasant smile, and raise your hat always. Be kind to the children and take an interest in everything local as far as you are able. Be one of the town's people at all times, and do this with all of them whether they are rich or poor."

Shut the Door Againt Rush of Trade

Manager of Quebec Store Tells of Splendid Results That Followed Newspaper Advertisement at Christmas Time—TheWindow Where Eggs Were Laid to Order—System of Learning Everything Possible About Merchandise When Buying—Method in Keeping Touch With Customers in Their Summer Homes.

J. W. Cantin, Quebec, Que.
Silver Medalist, Class C.

J. W. CANTIN, the manager of the grocery department of Myrand & Pouliot, in the ancient city of Quebec, has contributed an interesting reply to this competition. He, however, submitted his manuscript in French, and in consequence it may be that some of his ideas have been lost in the translation.

Monsieur Cantin is nothing if not frank, and his views on the methods for obtaining the best results in handling a business in such a city as is Quebec will undoubtedly attract considerable interest. There are several points on which he differs very materially from most of the other contestants. But in these there is no difference in the quality of salesmanship shown. It is only in the value placed upon the ultimate result of salesmanship effort that causes this Quebec manager to look upon the whole subject from another standpoint.

As will be seen by a glance at the photograph given here the store in which he is employed is of no mean order. When it is known that the stock carried is valued at $24,000 this will only impress itself more vividly on the mind of the reader.

Eggs While You Wait.

In window dressing and in the appreciation of it as a selling force Mon. Cantin is quite abreast of the other successful competitors. In naming an instance where his window has caused an extension of the sales of the store, he relates how he placed in a large basket in the window a quantity of eggs. There were also a number of chickens. On a card in a corner there was inscribed the invitation: "Eggs laid while you wait," giving the price. Through this window he says he was able to sell nine cases of eggs of thirty dozens each at a profit of 5½ cents per dozen. The chickens attracted the attention of the customers, and this fact made the selling much easier.

Knows What to Expect.

Coming to another phase of display Mon. Cantin comments on the value of show cards and price tickets. He says: "When there is no card with the price, the customer sometimes is annoyed by having to enter in order to ask the price. If he sees the price he knows what to expect. If he has the required money, he comes in and buys, or gives an order C.O.D. The sale is easier with with tickets."

He also favors interior display, and considers that it pays well, and among the lines placed prominently on the counters he says: "The counters we change every week. Sometimes it is merchandise which is not well known or which it is necessary to sacrifice, but this rarely happens. During Lent there are fish preparations; in summer mineral waters; in spring sugar and maple sugar in tablets, and a complete assortment of lines such as catsup, etc., etc."

Of the methods used for displaying goods near the front of the store he says: "We put in front of the shop merchandise which may be sold according to the season. In Lent, for example, we put a table with every sort of cheese, a table with all the kinds of fish—fresh and salt—in pretty plates and decorated with fresh parsley."

Now in regard to personal salesmanship Mon. Cantin admits that he has his clerks ask customers to buy certain goods which they have not asked for. He also says that it is quite possible for them to sell non-advertised goods as against advertised goods, if they want to, and the profit be larger.

Each Clerk Has Telephone List.

They have worked out an elaborate system doing work by telephone in this store and consider the instrument as of vast importance in keeping in touch with customers living at some distance from the store. Each clerk has his own list of customers and twice a week rings them up to inform them what is going on in the store, and to offer them fresh fish and kindred lines. Goods that are to be sold at reduced prices are also moved out in considerable quantities by reason of telephone calls. They take this means of informing customers when they can place an order for any line of goods with advantage to themselves.

Also when taking the orders of customers the clerks are advised to ask if nothing more is desired. Spices, vermicelli, essences and kindred lines are suggested, but they do not always persist for the reason that they do not desire to inconvenience the customer.

Extensive Advertising.

Quite an extensive advertising campaign is carried on by this firm. They have secured direct results in nearly every case. New customers have been brought to the store as a result of publicity directed along quality lines. Other ads. dealing with slight reductions in prices have had the effect of largely increasing the sales in the lines mentioned. In one case extracts and cornstarch were specially set out. Sales in those lines were noticed in almost every order, also in vegetables, the profit returned being close to 35 per cent., he says.

They use circulars too in connection with the newspaper publicity. Last Christmas they sent out one announcing a grand sale at cut prices. This was to draw the streams of Christmas shoppers. Every house and every street in the city was covered. "The result was that on the day of the sale we were obliged to bar the doors a dozen times because there were too many people. We made a great week, even for the month of December, extra good."

Their Cash System.

As to store equipment they have installed a mill for cutting meat which helps them to sell twice as much as they sold before they got it. Also they have an electric coffee mill. This is indispensable. An electric cash system operated by motor sends the money or the change of the sale in a little box. There are four boxes at each counter. This system, he explains, gives entire satisfaction. Each clerk makes checks of his sale through the next clerk who holds himself responsible.

Driver Held Responsible.

"As to delivery system," he adds, "we have eight wagons to handle the orders, and the methods which we use to insure good service are quite effective. The deliveries are made at fixed hours. At 8.30 and 10 a.m., and 2 and 4.30 p.m. Hurry orders are delivered by a special wagon at 11.30 and 5.30. There are special runs also to catch boats and trains. The driver is held responsible for merchandise. He must deliver them as he received them in good order. Two wagons leave at 8.30 a.m., for outlying places. Between the hours of delivery the wagons are occupied with freight. These wagons are under the direction of a man who delivers and received merchandise.

"By means of using a loose-leaf bookkeeping system we are enabled to send out bills each month, and by this means we are able to follow up credits when there is one which is slow in paying."

They carry a stock of $24,000, which they turnover six times a year.

Care in Buying.

"In learning more about goods in the store I never buy merchandise without demanding an explanation on how it is made and how used," he says. "When we receive it we mark the cost price and the sale price, and I explain to the clerks all that I know of that merchandise, and I encourage the clerks to read articles in the trade papers on the production of groceries. The trade journals are always at the service of the clerks. They serve to keep us informed on the condition of the markets and supply us with idea for putting in new goods and equipment."

In speaking of the store methods for buying goods, he says: "The clerk who has charge of the biscuit and confectionery department buys his merchandise just the same as the clerk in the meat department, who signs orders by the month. Each clerk has his department to keep up, but he gives and takes orders in all the other departments.

Surrounding Country.

"In seeking to increase our business and widen the radius of our sales we have a clerk who does the surrounding country for city customers who go out there for a short while in the summer time. We put out fruits and vegetables in fancy boxes. We change our show cases every week and always in a different style. In the month of May articles for housekeeping and cleaning house, in June show cases devoted to goods such as fishermen would need. We advertise frequently and always with success. The public is at home in the store of which they know the history and the methods of sale and prices. They come in confident, they go out satisfied. They come in again, and in greater and greater numbers. The advertisement is to-day the most powerful factor of all those which tend to make business, and too many business men ignore the fact."

WINDOW DISPLAY.

One Man Who Believes The Window is Soul of Store.

It has been rightly said that the windows are the soul of the store. Pick out a man who takes trouble with his displays, who changes them frequently and with artistic effect, and who makes them representative of the stock that is carried, and you have a man who is progressive and keen after business. Window display is the best form of advertising. From it the passer-by can judge of the character of the store, and get a fair estimate as to whether or not he is likely to get full value for his money—in other words he can tell if the store is worth patronizing or not.

Advertising is bringing goods before the public and getting them talked about. What better means can there be of showing them than a window display? The mind is forgetful, it is likewise covetous. A display is a reminder that a certain article is wanted; while when the eye rests on something that is not exactly a necessity but would be exceedingly nice to possess, then the bait is not thrown away. Put all you know into the windows. Do not think that anything will do for them. People are hasty in conclusions and they will not stop to think that the window may be but a poor sample of the strength of the store. If you put in a window that you do not like take it out again. Change a window twice a week if necessary, for it is a silent salesman working every hour of the day and night during which the articles can be seen, and therefore demands the best treatment.

General Dealer Moves Goods Rapidly

Ridgeville Dealer Outlines His Tactics in Supplying Customers So That They Do Not Flee to Mail Order Houses—Makes Good Use of His Window—Salesmanship Exhibited in Selling Tea at Good Profit—System of Sending Samples on Order Trips for the Clearing Out of Slow Goods or Perishable Products.

F. C. Williams, Ridgeville, Ont.
Silver Medalist, Class A.

F. C. WILLIAMS is not altogether a grocer. He is a general merchant located in a small centre. But he has shown ability to sell so many different lines of goods besides groceries that the judges felt it devolved upon them to grant him the silver medal for the class in which he had entered.

There are methods he has set down here that probably will be met with in the everyday life of many another general store, but it is the determined spirit manifested by the man, not to sit down tamely and allow the mail order houses to gobble up all the good business of his district that has set his entry apart from those of all the other general merchants.

Selling New Lines.

To begin with, he is a believer in the selling power of his windows even if he does not use them all for inducing sales in groceries. He says he finds them particularly helpful in introducing new lines of merchandise. Prints he refers to specially. He put a new piece or two in the other day, ticketed them, and had to "hand them out repeatedly to cut off lengths for curious customers." For any line he wants to push the window is utilized to give it the first "boost." Besides this when he desires to make a "special," he puts his goods in the windows, adds price and show cards, and by this means induces quite a healthy demand.

Every other week he changes his windows, and he has four of them. This may not be often enough to please many of "Grocer" readers, but he explains: "That he is out in the country; is very busy and has not the time to do better."

Price tickets and show cards both appeal to him, but it has been his experience, he says, that the latter produce the best results. He is able to make them act as out-door talkers for him.

Taking First Loss.

Mr. Williams evidently knows when to take the first loss in moving out slow goods, and has the courage to carry out his knowledge to fulfillment. As a general thing the goods he wants to sell most, or does not wish to hold over to another season, occupy the most prominent positions on his counters and shelves. He went through his shoe section a short time ago and ferreted out all the old shoes and rubbers he could find. These he put forthwith into a big box, set it out near the door, ticketed the lot and is cleaning them out in good order.

He is convinced, too, that interior display pays, for the fact has been demonstrated to him time and time again. Just a little while ago he hung up a special line of fabric that was not moving out particularly rapidly. This he ticketed, announcing a reduction of one cent on the yard, and featuring it as a special bargain. Whether it was the one cent that turned the balance or just the sight of the goods, he did not know and was not able to find out, but at any rate there was a rush for that particular line and the whole lot will go out, he says, as a result of that display.

Suggesting Goods.

He differs a little from the other successful contestants in the methods he uses in suggesting goods, other than those not asked for by customers. Probably this is so because he knows his people and feels that they know him and his goods. But anyway, when a new piece of goods comes in he shows it, explains its fine points, and simply asks the customer to keep him and his goods in mind when the decision comes to buy that, or something like it.

Then turning to salesmanship he says he is able to frequently sell a particular line of soap at a good profit over others, and he has a word to say about tea to bear out the point he is striving to make.

He says that he can take a tea, costing one cent a pound more than the line he sells at 25 cents, and sell it for 30 cents a pound six times out of ten in place of the other. That is salesmanship, especially in a small centre where money is not the loose commodity it is in the cities and big towns.

Telephone Talks.

He has a telephone and increases his sales by means of it. When he happens to have in a line of perishable goods, as oranges or bananas in hot weather, and oysters and haddies in the winter, he always manages to sell "a nice little bunch over the phone."

Mr, Williams has the suggesting of goods down to a system. It is a definite policy that he pursues. He makes out a list of specials each week, and has his order-takers take them out on their trips to the country. He says that he has seen that particular line cleared right out on the trip of the order men—before, in fact, customers who came to the store could take advantage of it. Sometimes it works the other way round, but the order-trip folks are given the preference, if there is any.

Uses Newspaper Locals.

He uses the newspapers a little, but does not go in for regular advertising space, because, he says, the people do not pay attention to those things. What he believes in is the use of the local columns in a Ridgeville "sheet." Often he writes these himself so that they appear rather as items of news than as ads. Besides, as he says, nearly everybody reads that column.

There is a pretty fair line of equipment in his Ridgeville store. He has a coffee mill, three sets of scales, a cheese box, five silent salesmen, self-measuring oil tanks, ball scales for sugars, and a big platform scale for nails and other lines of heavy hardware. The ceiling of the establishment is metallic, arranged in panel style and nicely painted.

He considers his show cases do a lot of selling for him, and he changes the exhibits in them from time to time. As for the self-measuring oil tank he says he would not be without it for twice its cost.

Delivery System.

He has five separate order trips—taking one day and delivering on the following. There are regular runs for certain days, and he always endeavors to live up to his obligations and effect his deliveries in systematic order. As for his bookkeeping he says he has reduced it to a system, considering as paramount simplicity and the saving of time.

Mr. Williams figures his profits on the cost price of his goods. He has found this the most satisfactory method, and says he never could see the sense of estimating on the selling price. He aims to secure an average profit of 20 per cent., and carries a stock of $4,000, which he turns over three times a year.

Learning About Goods.

He is a careful reader of his trade paper and "pumps" the travelers all he can for information on the individdal lines they are handling. He finds that his perusal of the "Canadian Grocer" gives him a better knowledge of the whole situation, while it also supplies him with ideas to write his ads., so that they return him the biggest possible margin of profit.

Buying from travelers who come to the store he has found to be the best method of stocking. He thereby is able to scan the stock he has on the shelves and so is saved from the evil of overstocking.

To sum up, he has confidence in his goods, and his customers have confidence in him, and in his judgment. Because of this they buy goods he recommends to them from time to time. He considers it all simply a matter for confidence all round.

He sends out samples on all his trips, and gives his brightest attention to the lines he likes the best, and sees to it that his salesmen do the same. That is his business creed.

Clerk Succeeds in Selling New Goods

Salesman in Maritime City Tells of His Efforts in Selling Lines of Imported Pickles and Confectionery Never Before Shown in His City—Confidence in Selling Power of Price Tickets and Show Cards—The System.

John H. Wilson, St. John, N. B.
Bronze Medalist, Class C.

"A CERTAIN soap powder well advertised to the consumer gave us 22½ per cent. profit. Another soap powder not advertised gave an additional 5 per cent. When the first powder was asked for, I always brought the two and showed them to the customer, explaining as I did so that the second powder was not advertised, but that it was really a first-class article. I then asked them to try it, and five times out of six the powder with the higher profit would be purchased."

The above paragraph taken from the competition reply of John H. Wilson, of St. John, N.B., typifies his ability to sell certain lines of non-advertised goods even when goods that had been treated to a big publicity campaign had been asked for.

Selling New Goods.

It is typical also of the belief that the man behind the counter can sell goods that are absolutely new to the public if he wants to.

As regards window displays he says that at the time he sent along his entry to this contest the windows of the establishment in which he worked were attracting customers every day. Special displays such as pure maple syrups and sugar, honey, maple cream and kindred lines he said, had induced customers to enter the store and buy some of these goods. He adds that once they were inside it was an easy matter for the clerks to sell them other goods. Sometimes, too, the goods displayed attracted their attention and effected sales.

Pickles and Confectionery.

He gives an instance of an English pickle sold by that window. This pickle had never been displayed or advertised in St. John. He made a special window of them, adding also their vinegars, jams and marmalade which also were new, and states that the arrangement was a great success. He cites a case in which the window had sold goods never advertised to the consumer. This was an exhibit of English confectionery.

He dresses his window every week and uses show cards. He thinks these give a finished appearance to the display, and also are valuable because the customers can see at a glance the description of the goods and also the exact cost.

Likewise with interior display. This New Brunswick clerk considers that it pays, and the goods placed prominently on their counters and shelves are principally tinned and bottled lines. They have specially made racks along the front of the counters for displaying biscuits. These racks have glass lids, so that as the customers approach the counter they have a full view of sixty tins always before them. And these sell goods he says.

Not Mere Convenience.

The telephone is not a mere convenience in his estimation. They use it extensively to increase sales. For instance, he says that should a customer call up and ask for eggs he always suggests bacon and ham as the one generally goes with the other. He finds that this sells goods. Also, should they have any new goods in he would inform the customers of the nature of the article, and tells them he will be pleased to supply a small quantity for trial. Nine times out of ten, he says, customers will order two or three of the articles he suggests to them.

Show Cards.

His firm does not believe in newspaper advertising, and except at regular seasons they do not go in for circulars, but at Christmas and Easter they enclose a circular giving a list of specialities with every order sent out for delivery, or sold over the counter. He believes in this because when anyone requires a special article they know the prices and exactly what the store carries. Window cards round out the total of their advertising. Each week he writes a card of half sheet size with some catchy phrase and he also places in the slope in the front of the window a card about 20 inches by 8 inches naming a special article, such as choicest boiled ham sliced, and puts the price. He changes these every week, and says people come there to see what alteration has been made. The day before he sent his competition reply along his employer had told him that a grocer down the street came every week to study the cards.

The Store Equipment.

And as this man believes in interior display so does he look upon store equipment and fixtures. In their store they have a bacon slicer, and electric coffee grinder, three sets of computing scales, a totalling cash register, a cheese cutter, dustproof bins, circular vegetable stand with water spray, and electric lighting. They also have five silent salesmen.

In speaking of the value he places upon each he says that the bacon slicer gives the customer any thickness of slice required. The coffee grinder shows the coffee to be absolutely fresh, and ground while waiting. The cash register working with electricity has four small lamps which light as soon as the drawer opens, and this attracts attention to the amount purchased. The cheese cutter cuts exactly one-quarter, one-half or one pound, just as the customer desires, without any waste. They have a ceiling from which are suspended thirty electric lamps. They have a show case built into the window which draws out and in as required. All cases have electric brackets.

The Store Systems.

Delivery is another branch that is given special attention in this store. They have their own teams and have provided for a regular departure of the outfits to the different sections of the city, so that a good service is always insured their customers.

They have a loose-leaf system of bookkeeping, and he considers the best features of this are the small number of books required, and the ease with which they are handled, it being possible to see at a glance the amount the customer owes without looking up an index to find the name and folio number.

He believes in figuring profits on cost rather than on the sale price. This, because they know exactly the profit on each article, and can thereby at any time see what it has been for a certain day or a certain week. They aim to secure 20 per cent. profit, and consider this necessary because, he says, they have a very expensive store to keep up. Their stock is valued at $5,000, and they take stock yearly.

Buys From Manufacturer.

He believes in regard to learning more about the goods in the store in asking customers how they like something they may have bought before. Usually with a good customer he keeps mental tab on some new line sold her and on her next visit asks her how she found them. In this way he keeps fully informed as to the articles on which his information is not exact. He also reads the editorial and advertising sections of the trade papers to keep in touch with the markets, and to find out where to buy certain articles direct from the manufacturer. The latter is their policy as far as they can work it out.

Mr. Wilson says that he can sell goods that he recommends to his customers, because once they take an article vouched for by him and find it of the quality he stated, they have confidence to purchase other lines when he advises them to.

Another method he has for increasing sales is the making of a special display and price for a certain article on a certain day. This he says draws customers' attention to the article and brings them into the store. There they have a chance of selling some other line of goods.

The Power of Newspaper Advertising

Saliesman in the Gateway of the West Relates Some of the Methods He Has Found to be Productive of Results in Disposing of Goods — Belief in Window Display and in Systematic Interior Arrangement.

James J. Freed, Fort William, Ont.
Silver Medalist, Class B.

HERE is an outline of the methods followed by James J. Freed, a clerk in the Climax Grocery, 113 South May street, Fort William, Ont.

In this story the need of ability on the part of the man behind the counter to sell goods regardless of price is brought out in a manner there is no gainsaying. Every issue touched upon by Mr. Freed shows that in Fort William the grocers are quite alive to the needs of the situation.

A Sale of Biscuits.

He believes in the selling power of all the little embellishments that can be added in intensifying the display of any kind or class of goods. He believes in the selling power of the window. He believes it is a business getter, and to prove his point he says that recently he put in a display of biscuits arranged in glass dishes with small price cards on each variety. They sold more of that brand of biscuits during the week this was in the window than two weeks previous put together. Goods that never had been advertised by the manufacturer to any of their customers, have also been sold by means of that window. In proof of this he cites a case in which a new line of bottled fruits and jelly had been introduced there. Fort William customers knew nothing of these goods previously. So effective was the display, however, that the whole of the first shipment was sold out in less than a week's time.

Displaying Goods.

The window of his store is changed every week, and the fruit window every day. He used show cards and price tickets and considers the latter as indispensable. They form in his opinion an important part in window dressing, and can also be used to good advantage in the store. Show cards with good catchy phrases often make a sale, creating a desire for the goods on which the card is placed.

Among the goods that he places prominently on counters and shelves he mentions honey in glass and comb, pickles, olives, fruit in glass, and all lines of fancy goods in similar containers. Cooked and smoked ham and bacon, soda crackers in tins and packages, and fancy biscuits in packages.

In displaying goods near the front of the store Mr. Freed says they build pyramids of glass goods on the front counter, and also have an arrangement of fruit and vegetables around the pillar in the centre of the store. Their silent salesmen filled with confectionery and also biscuit display stand are all placed in the front of the store. Quite frequently customers buy such goods they see displayed.

Selling Non-Advertised Line.

Demonstrating how a good clerk can sell a line of non-advertised goods upon which a fair profit is returned against a line upon which the profit is small but which has been extensively advertised, Mr. Freed cites an instance in disposing of a line of imported food stuffs. They stocked this particular brand about one year ago, he said, and when a customer came in he always introduced this one, relating how satisfactory it had been to him while in camp during the summer. He would tell how he had prepared them and how they had been so very acceptable to him. This talk was to swing the customer over from the intention to buy another brand of goods, and during the winter quite a large business had been built up in Fort William for this line of imported goods.

The Telephone.

"At this time of the year when fresh green stuffs are coming in we make extensive use of the telephone," he says. "When the goods arrive customers are called up and informed as to the lines that are in fresh that morning and many orders are anticipated and received in this way. At other seasons of the year when new goods are being received the same tactics are followed. Much time for both store men and customers is saved by doing this, and I believe it to be a good practical method of increasing sales."

In addition to this he has found that three out of every five customers, at least those who are not in a hurry, will respond to clerks' suggestion that they buy goods of other lines than those which they first ordered. He considers it is only a matter of appeal. If it is properly done it will generally be crowned with success.

Newspaper Advertising.

They believe in newspaper advertising in his store and he relates three special instances where direct and good results were obtained. In the first case three thousand oranges were put on sale and the lot was disposed of at nine o'clock p.m. In the second case an appeal was made for two or three lines in the candy department. The effect this had was to increase the sales considerably, not only in the lines advertised but in others, the customers finding they needed them after coming to the store. The other advertisement was in connection with the cereal display spoken of earlier in the story, the time when the new breakfast food was introduced to Fort William households. This ad. pointed out the delicious qualities of the cereal, how it was made, and how best it could be served. The response was satisfactory, and as a missionary effort Mr. Freed says, the advertisement was entirely successful.

They do not use circulars, and at present have no other advertising scheme, but he says that they hope to publish a booklet soon giving information about the store and containing a price list for distribution amongst the farmers in the surrounding country.

Power of Equipment.

Store equipment and fixtures are important factors in the life of this Fort William store. Mr. Freed's story relates how an electric coffee grinder, computing scales, national cash register, patent cheese display case, biscuit case, built against the wall with sliding glass covers, biscuit display case holding twelve tins, one silent salesman, and two long counter show cases have all been installed. They use three clusters of Tungsten lamps, four lamps in a cluster, down the centre of the store, and also had the windows well lighted. Recently the firm wrote away for quotations on a meat slicer, in the belief that it would be a great money and time saver in the store,

Defining the value of each of these, Mr. Freed contends that the coffee grinder is a big time saver, and that the computing scales are money savers in weighing hams and bacons and cheese alone. The cash register he values because it shows the amount of cash which should be in the store. The biscuits in cases are kept free from dust while the same display acts as a silent salesman. The cheese case keeps the contents out of the path of dust and flies. It also prevents its drying out as quickly as would otherwise be the case.

Divides the City.

They have two delivery wagons in the Climax store. The city is divided into two sections, east and west, and each man covers the same ground every day. They make three deliveries in the morning and the same in the afternoon. The last one being at five o'clock. Orders taken after that hour are sent out on the first delivery the next morning.

Referring to bookkeeping, Mr. Freed remarks that their business is on a strictly cash basis, and that consequently there is very little bookkeeping to do. They aim to secure an average of twenty per cent. on the goods they sell.

Samples New Goods.

He reads all the special articles in The Canadian Grocer to secure methods that he may be able to learn more about the goods in the store. He also does his best to draw information from travelers about such lines as they represent. The other method he uses is to sample as far as possible all new goods as they come into the establishment. In regards to the reading of this paper Mr. Freed relates that in the issue of April 14th last he read an article on pineapples which dealt with the raw fruit and value of the fruit juice and methods of preparations. Several days afterwards he met a customer who had never used the raw fruit, and he was at once able from the information he had absorbed to interest her and made a sale. Then again a short time ago he read an article about the source of sago and tapioca, and this has since been a benefit to him, he says, in several ways.

Week-end Specials.

They have a want book in the store in which a note is made of any line that is getting so low that the buyers may know when to re-stock. They do not stock heavily in perishable goods; they also buy light which enables them to have them always fresh and clean for customers.

Mr. Freed says that he finds explaining to a customer in brief chatty style something about the benefits of an article he is trying to sell generally suffices in landing the sale. He first makes it a point, however, to find out all the strong selling points of the article concerned. Customers seldom fail to respond to such a recommendation.

Among the methods which they have used with success in increasing sales are specials for week-end shoppers. Each Friday they advertise one good special for Saturday, and he says that since doing so Saturday business has considerably increased. Nine customers out of ten buy other goods in addition to those specially advertised.

CHECK FOR ONE CENT.

A Kentucky firm sent to each address on their mailing list a check for 1 cent, payable to the lady of the house. On the check it was stated that 1c was due to the lady for two minutes of her time while she read the enclosed letter. The scheme attracted great attention, and did not cost much, as very few of the checks sent out were cashed, being kept as souvenirs instead.

GROCERS IN BRAZIL.

A consular report from the city of Pernambuco in Brazil says there is an excellent chance to extend the trade in American canned goods in that section. This city has a population of 225,000, the grocery trade being controlled by Portugese merchants. There are many attractive and conveniently arranged stores, and the consumption of canned goods is very large. Most of the foodstuffs are at present imported from Europe.

A Revolution Effected in Selling Tea

Tells How He Found the Sales of That Beverage When He Started in Business Twenty Years ago; and How He Worked for a Transfer of the Trade From the Tea Stores to His.

J. Forsyth, Jr., Dartmouth, N. S.,
Bronze Medalist, Class A.

"I PURPOSE," said he, "first telling of the line in which I made the greatest success in salesmanship and then how it was achieved.

"When I started in business, twenty years ago the tea department of most grocery stores was in a bad way.

Twenty Years Ago.

"The grocer was losing a large portion of that trade. It was a common occurence to have persons come into the store to make a purchase, having in their hand a pound of tea, with a check stuck beneath the string, obtained at a tea store, or, when calling on our customers for their weekly order and suggesting tea as a possible requirement, to be told, "Oh, we get our tea at the tea store, we get checks with it."

"Whereas, to-day, every customer to whom I sell groceries, I sell tea as well. Not only that, but I sell tea to a large number of people to whom I do not regularly sell groceries. To such an extent is this so, that 4½ per cent. of my total sales of groceries is tea and the most remarkable feature of it all, is that I keep only one kind of tea and that a bulk tea.

Got Good Brand.

"When first I determined to push tea I undertook to do my own blending. I was not long in finding out that what I did NOT know about tea blending would fill a large volume. I therefore got a good standard brand, named it, "Forsyth Jr's Famous 30c Tea" and started to boom it. I have no hesitation in saying that the most extensively advertised tea is not known as well in this town as the "Famous" and if anyone thing more than another contributed to this fact and to its successful sale, I have no hesitation in saying that thing is personal conversation. No customer gets out of my store without being impressed with the merits of the "Famous."

His Advertising.

"But to make this method of selling easier and more effective, I found it a good thing to have their minds prepared somewhat beforehand, and so rarely an issue of our local paper appears that does not have some reference to it, either in the locals or in display advertising and when I start in to speak my little piece, I am met with the observation, "Yes, we saw it advertised."

"One of the quickest methods I have used to get it introduced in a large number of new places is as follows:

Joins Manufacturers.

"I get the manufacturer of some article who values an advertisement to go in with me and we share the expense on such a deal as this; for one week we will sell one pound of tea and one tin of cocoa say, both for the price of the tea. I advertise both tea and cocoa extensively and in this way we both get our goods into homes where they have not been before.

"Occasionally we make a window display and give a small article free with each pound of tea sold. We sell crockery-ware and these gifts consist largely of odds and ends selected from the stock.

"Our blotters and calendars, programme and catalogue advertisements invariably mention the "Famous." I adhere religiously to quality. The recent market advances I have contented myself to lose rather than sacrifice quality.

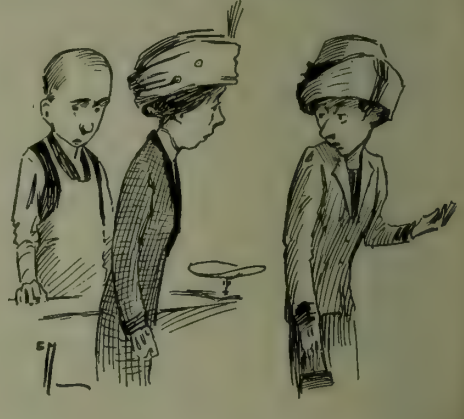
"The great advantage derived from having only one kind of tea is that you can talk quantity to the tea merchant. The trade of a dealer who sells twenty different brands of tea is not worth very much to any one wholesaler, but if he were to buy that quantity of one brand his trade would be diligently cultivated."

To the judges it seemed a pity that Forsyth, Jr., stopped so soon in his reply. He does not answer all the points in the competition, but contents himself with but one achievement in salesmanship.

The competition reply of R. J. E. McCrea, of Guelph, Ont., who was awarded the silver medal in Class "B," will be found on pages 131 and 132.

Profits from Reading Magazine Ads.

Interesting Experience of Eastern Dealer Who Sought Business Along These Lines—Always Forestalled Demand of Customers Who Would Come to His Store Looking for New Lines —Visits Other Cities to Keep Abreast of Times.



DO grocers take advantage of the advertising campaigns by which manufacturers are trying to give publicity to their products?

The grocer, generally speaking, is so wrapped up in his business that he has but scant time to devote to magazine reading. The daily newspaper and his trade paper, the one keeping him in touch with the current events of the day, the other dealing solely with matters of interest to the grocery trade, these are about the limit of his regular reading.

Touching first upon another point it may be said that the grocer demands three things from the manufacturer he considers friendly to the trade. He asks for a fair profit on the goods he handles; he requires that in point of quality they be such that he can safely recommend them to his most exacting customers; and lastly the average grocer welcomes any campaign by which the manufacturer creates a consumer-demand for his goods.

Not At All Necessary.

The grocer of to-day frankly admits that the last concession is not necessary. It is acceptable, but if the other two considerations are lacking or either one of them for that matter, the grocer often refuses to handle goods offered him under such conditions. He realizes that his customers place implicit confidence in his word. He is the court of last resort and a word from him, in the vast majority of cases will upset the demand for an article that has been

"boomed" by consumer advertising and in the handling of which due provision has not been made for his remuneration.

When He is Friendly.

But, granted that a friendly manufacturer is giving publicity to his products, does the grocer avail himself of this asset?

The experience of E. J. Quinn, whose store is located at the corner of St. Catherine St. west and Greene Avenue, Montreal, should prove interesting to other members of the trade. Mr. Quinn caters largely to a class of customers who demand the best and who are willing and ready to buy new goods. He was aware of the fact that there are several journals which have a wide circulation among homes for the reason that they are published for women. There are several others including a popular weekly which are very extensively read. Mr. Quinn has made it almost a duty to look through the advertising columns of the most prominent of these publications and notice what grocery or allied lines are given prominence.

Reasons For His Policy.

He felt that the manufacturer who had interest sufficient in his goods to advertise them to that extent must have confidence that the public would appreciate them after a preliminary trial. Mr. Quinn read between the lines and saw quality written there. Knowing that they were being widely advertised in his own neighborhood, he wrote for further information and, if the buying was satisfactory from a financial standpoint, he sent in a small order. After satisfying himself that the articles thus bought were as represented he put his selling forces behind them and awaited developments.

It will thus be seen that one of Mr. Quinn's business ideas has been to procure new grocery articles and introduce them to his customers. In achieving this he has been assisted to a considerable extent by advertising that did not cost him anything, but which he was wise enough to appreciate. New goods secured in this way were, therefore, not entirely new to his customers. When they would be suggested in the ordinary buisness way they were known to the extent that the women had noticed the advertisements regarding them in the journals just mentioned.

Visits to U. S. Cities.

To keep abreast or rather ahead of the demand, Mr. Quinn makes frequent trips to cities in the United States, business of course attracting but he always makes it a point to visit some of the big jobbers, grocers and manufacturers to find out what new goods are being put on the market. These and other means he has employed in catering to his customers, and his initiative was not long in being recognized. After one or two experiences those who dealt with him began to realize that he was eager to give them the best the market afforded and that he was endeavoring to anticipate their desires as much as possible. If they thought they would like to try some article that was widely advertised, even though these "ads." were confined largely to one or two journals, they generally found that Mr. Quinn had a stock and that the price was just as advertised. They were receiving an advantage that was enjoyed by the residents of the large American cities and they had these goods delivered to their homes long before they began to come into general use.

Selling These New Goods.

The buying of new groceries is probably Mr. Quinn's forte but he also has to sell them. He first satisfies himself that they will pass the close inspection his customers are likely to give them. The clerks are then made familiar with them. If it is a new breakfast food for example, and a special method of cooking is required they become familiar with it. If it is a new biscuit, they learn its peculiar qualities; if a new summer beverage they know how to use it. The individual clerk is supposed to know the price and the principal points about the goods. In other words he becomes familiar with them. Only a small quantity is purchased at first and if they find a ready sale more are ordered, the endeavor being to keep ahead of the demand.

He Posts List.

Mr. Quinn has posted regularly a list of the articles that are to receive special attention from the clerks from day to day. The list is not so long that customers are likely to become suspicious of a too strenuous effort to make an extra sale, but a few well selected items every day to be given a special selling effort on the part of the staff, has proved a good idea according to Mr. Quinn's experience.

In some cases he has found articles that were merely fads, but there were others including a new tea biscuit which now has a wide Canadian sale which proved winners.

Imports Vegetables.

Mr. Quinn has indeed a fancy stock. During the winter he imported fruits and vegetables direct from the United States markets to meet the demand of those customers who had the means to pay for this luxury. Summer beverages such as grape and lime juices and others of this kind have developed into an extensive sale. Confectionery is also a prominent department, Mr. Quinn stating that it was remarkable the amount of one fancy line of chocolates he handled every week.

Practical Criticism of Grocery Ads.

Dealer Who Knows Something of Style and Effects Goes Over Several Ads. Printed From all Sections of Country The Waste of White Space—Dignified Style of The Old Fur Company—The Value of the Firm Name—The Ad. That Tells of The Free Gift.

By a Grocer.

CRITICIZING is like judging farmers' butter at a county fair—a thankless task, but so long as I have to do it I suppose I should not mind whose toes I trample on, especially if, like a doctor, I do a little good.

Personally, I believe an "Ad." should be a sort of heart to heart talk, giving sensible, salable arguments, and backing up statements with prices. All prices are like all shot and no powder and vice versa. You have no difficulty perhaps in giving a nice little selling talk over the counter—put the same thing into print—it will pay. I remember a grocer who only changed his "Ad." once a year—Reminds you of the man who only takes a bath once a year—both equally effective. Change your ad. every day, if you only say you have fresh strawberries to-day at two for a quarter.

Went to the Ad. School.

The writer has attended ad. schools, but does not believe all they hand out is practical. They teach you to know the names for type and suggest sending in your ads. covered with hieroglyphics, describing the kind of type you want. It only makes the printer in a country office swear. They also teach you the use of synonyms, words of similar meaning with others—see Webster, it will save you $25. If your opponent uses a heavy border, you use a light. Be different. Individuality is success, if it's backed up by common sense.

Wasting Good Space.

Now for the ad. D. F. McLean, of Port Hood, Cape Breton, writes; "Get your Easter groceries from D. F. McLean," in the centre of half a page. I'm a good bit like the small circus boss, who on the completion of a lithograph showing his menagerie, cried: "Great Scott, man, look at all that sky wasted—stick in a giraffe, elephant and snake or two with the rest filled in with sacred peacocks." I don't believe in wasting good white space. It's all right to leave enough to bring out your ad., but the rest is wasted.

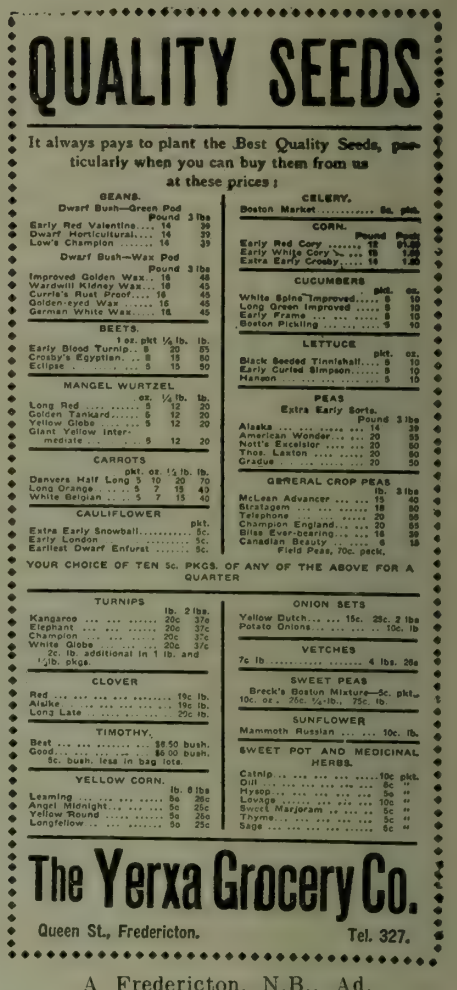
The only ad. I ever saw that ate up white space and paid, was for a line of cigarettes. A whole page with a black cat in the centre was used, and explanations followed next day. Mr. McLean's ad. does not influence me to think his goods are attractive or his prices low. The only use of a "command" advertisement as: "Drink ———— Tea," is on a sign or a small ad.

Dignified Old Style.

"Hudson Bay Store News" is a dignified old style ad. No splutter or splash. The printer has set it up well, and it smoothly portrays promises which you feel sure will be fulfilled. Criticisms of this style of ad., which it is said will soon feel the competition of more startling methods when the Eaton Company extends its business to Calgary, would be useless. It will be interesting, however, to see which wins out, the "yellow" or the conservative type of publicity.

The Firm Name.

The ad. of T. W. Robinson & Co., Ltd., Moose Jaw, is along similar lines and very good.



The Paragon Store, of Regina, comes out with a page length ad. one hundred lines wide. It heads its ad. with the firm name, sometimes a good, and sometimes a bad thing. Take for instance Eaton's ad., people look to the name for bargains, while in the case of a less widely known firm a "catch" phrase, or price is better.

They also use a stock cut, one you could buy for twenty or twenty-five cents, consisting of a hand reaching out to different staple groceries, supposed to illustrate the heading "Square Dealing," how I don't exactly know. For the rest the ad. is good, and full of trade-bringing prices.

Cash Trade Gift.

The Winnipeg Farmers' Store heads their ad., "Free, Free"—sounds ridiculous, nothing in this world is free. With a pound of tea a fancy cup and saucer is added, the whole to be given to every customer buying $10 worth of groceries. That means a gift of 6 per cent. Most dealers make 20 per cent.—6 per cent. off leaves 14 per cent.—you must reckon on 10 per cent. for running expenses, leaving 4 per cent. for the dealer, hardly enough to live on. Otherwise the ad. is good.

A Fredericton, N.B., Ad.

A Continuous Game.

The Royal Store, of Newfoundland, prints a good departmental store ad. No talk on groceries, just plain prices.

Advertising is a continuous game, year in, year out, that is if you are successful. You are trading to-day on the name and reputation you made yesterday. Ads. will only bring the customer to the store, it will not make him buy. It's then up to you and your store organization.

Reminiscences of Thirty Years and More

John Johnston's Career as a Grocer in a Suburb of Montreal For a Period of More Than Three Decades—Fundamental Idea of Selling Foodstuffs Same as Then—Sugar "York" Shilling a Pound.

By H. Theobald.

Is salesmanship in the retail grocery business merely an innovation of to-day, or is it one of those ideas that may be termed ever old and ever new?

Glancing back it seems to be easy to trace step by step the evolution of the grocery store and it is not such a far cry either to that "meeting place" which also served as a store and in which the proprietor's chief duty was to provide wood for the stove and seating accommodation in the form of boxes and barrels for the villagers.

Thirty-six years has been John Johnston's span in the grocery business, and while admitting many wonderful changes he claims that the fundamental idea of selling foodstuffs, as it is considered to-day, shows no material change from that which was followed, but probably not fully recognized, three or four decades ago.

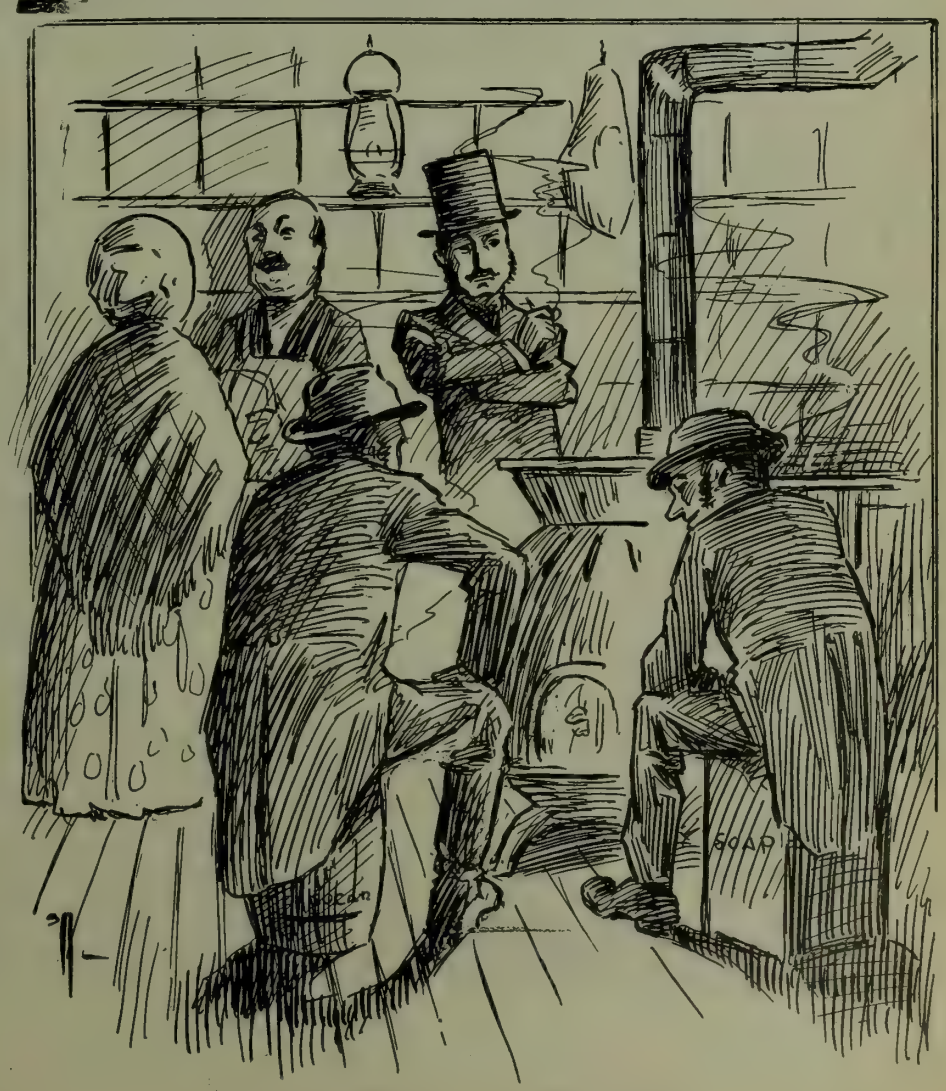
And that idea is nothing more than that people will pay a few cents more for quality.

Salesmanship to-day embraces many subdivisions and probably none is recognized as more important for the upbuilding of a business and the satisfying of a customer than to call their attention to articles of guaranteed quality and to point out to them that these are finally the cheapest and are more than worth the little extra money for them.

Wants to Retire.

Mr. Johnston has for thirty-six successive years occupied his present store at the corner of Prince Arthur street and Colonial Ave. It has served him well, or rather he has reaped according as he did sow. Now some younger man can have it but it is safe to say that Mr. Johnston will always watch it with interest. Discussing recently the changes the trade has undergone he remarked that undoubtedly salesmanship was being placed on a new basis but that one of the principal ideas remained practically the same.

After several years with a wholesale grocer in Montreal and then training with a retailer, Mr. Johnston in 1875 decided to go into business for himself. The location he chose was then beyond the limits of the Montreal of that day. St. James street, and St. Paul were the principal thoroughfares and our ambitious young proprietor opened for business in what was called the Tamarac Village. The suburbs were unthought of.



Pioneer Trials.

It is the gracer who has been one of the pioneers taat realizes the difference between the conditions of the past. Mr. Johnston glanced along his shelves of fancy biscuits numbering a great many varieties and remarked: "When I first handled biscuits there were no more than four or five different kinds. Look at the biscuits offered to-day. I remember too, when you might have sold butter by the pail full. Those were the days when refrigerators were non est, and in warm weather unless great care was taken butter would become almost a liquid. And as to taste, most of it was awful. In the manufacture of butter alone great strides have been made, and the dairy butter then sold would not be accepted by present day bakers. Of course there were some good butter makers but the practice was to hold the summer make for the winter when milk would become scarce, and it was natural that with a crude system of storing, the butter was likely to lose its flavor or to take those which were so unpalatable. Yes, rancid butter was a common thing in those days, I solved the problem by making arrangements with several farmers to bring me fresh butter regularly, but I often had to take the other kind, too.

Selling Sugar.

"Then take sugar. Granulated was 12½ cents a pound, and when it dropped to 10 cents the people thought it a bargain. Brown sugar was the favorite in those days, not only because it was cheaper, but there were some fine grades of Muscavados, Barbados, etc., that were good. Granulated has replaced them to-day.

"Your salesman could not have talked canned goods then for excepting lobster and salmon there was scarcely anything else put up in the canned form. There were possibly a few vegetables, but I doubt it.

An Ontario Man's Success in Moose Jaw

Sketch of the Interesting Business Career of E. F. Cassidy, one of the Recognized Successful Retailers of Saskatchewan—The Ideas That Have Made His Success Possible—His Belief in the Opportunities Sure to Come to Him in the Great West—His Start in Small Corner Grocery and His Advance Into the Proprietorship of Two Stores.

WELL-MEANING friends laughed at E. F. Cassidy when he left Toronto, Ont., seven years ago in search of better things in the far and freer West. He was leaving a steady and assured position for, at best, only a hope, and accordingly was set down as one of those rolling stones that gather no "moss."

Still seven years ago when Mr. Cassidy left the east he departed from a position of dependence even if it were a place of trust. To-day, as a glance at the accompanying illustrations will show, he seems fairly well situated as grocers go, and appears to have gained a firm grasp on the position of independence which he craved. Undoubtedly he has succeeded even beyond the measure of his dreams, and it is to be supposed he never came to regret the day when he turned his back on the commercial east and set his face resolutely to the rising sun and the wide-spreading prairies, whose illimitable vastness, appalls the average man.

His Business Career.

The business career of E. F. Cassidy is interesting because he didn't start in business as soon as he had "landed" in the west. He engaged first of all with T. W. Robinson Co., Ltd., and worked for them for one year and a half. Then he went over to T. J. McCammon for a year. Now, up to this time Mr. Cassidy had not set the world afire. He was bright, and always willing, but the opportunity had not yet come to him. Then times got bad—real bad. He became literally, land hungry and took up a homestead in the south country. He worked on it too until he had "proved" it, and then he came back to Moose Jaw and bought out a small corner grocery at the corner of River street and Ninth avenue. He only needed one clerk and one delivery boy, but he got along. To-day his store on River street west, in the Turnbull Block, is considered by some, one of the finest in Western Canada, and a credit to the city in which he cast his lot. He requires a staff of nine assistants in that store and they are busy assistants, so one can tell he is doing business. But in addition to this store he opened last May a branch store 63 miles south-west of Moose Jaw, and anticipates opening another in a new section shortly..

A Man With Ideas.

But he didn't get along because he was lucky; he won out in the game because he had ideas and was ready and willing to back them up with cash. Mr. Cassidy is credited with being a good and a discriminating buyer, too, and no doubt that has helped a great deal. But still he will always say that it was the ideas that really counted. He is still working them out for that matter. For instance he believes in standard qualities and generally refuses to consider anything else. He sees that his goods are pure and that they are fresh when bought. He always tries to sell them when they are still fresh. He keeps the store free from mice and insects that might have a tendency to produce or spread disease. His stock, by careful watching, is turned over six times a year so that in the general sense of the word the goods are always fresh.

The store is divided into departments and each one is in charge of a competent salesman. In the crockery and glassware section he has taken care that the sets of dishes carried in stock can be made up, piece by piece, at any time. He has a section for graniteware, shelf hardware and tinware; also a stationery and sundry department at which can be purchased many lines of note paper, and even alarm clocks and cigars. He has a flour, feed and seed department, which has its own chop mill and produces its own oat chop. It is said that this department will fill orders for hay by the bale or by the car, and oats by bushel or in car lots. Then, of course there is the main, or grocery section.

A Specialist on Groceries.

It is in groceries that Mr. Cassidy glories. The other lines are all right and necessary but it is groceries that are his special study. It might be interesting to note what he says when speaking of salesmanship. "It is easy to buy job lines and offer supposedly great bargains, but I consider such a policy detrimental to any business man who intends to carry it on permanently and in a practical way." That is what he says about it, and it is along the line of such a belief that he has shaped his course always. Just possibly that may account to some extent, for his success so far. And another thing, Mr. Cassidy says: "We have the dust-proof bins, the best yet manufactured for the grocery trade, and everything that goes into the bins is free from foreign substance." Another idea, you see that he was willing to put money into cleanliness. And to proceed: "Everything that is liable to taint—bacon, lard, butter and cheese, is kept in glass or enamelled refrigerators." He will always try to show his customers, at least, that he is much in earnest about these things.

Then E. F. Cassidy is a crank on tea and coffee. He thinks that for everybody concerned it is a wast of money to buy low grade goods, in either of these commodities. He doesn't believe much in a house-to-house canvass, but does place some reliance on and makes good use of the telephone and the post-office. The illustrations would seem to show he is getting on, all right, and those are a few of the things he has included in his business creed.

Success and Experience.

He is not the only man who has gone west and succeeded even against the darkest forebodings of those near and dear to them in the east. There have been many such. But this story has nothing to do with these. This is only meant to show that a man who has had the proper training, and who has good ideas, and who is willing to work out those ideas, can almost always get what he wants, and to where he wants. He doesn't necessarily have to go west, but probably the west does present more openings for such a man.

Mr. Cassidy had had good experience in Toronto, eight long years of it. Part of his training had been effected in one of the large wholesale houses and the remaining three years in a large retail store. So he had lots of experience, and had worked up to a fairly lucrative position, at the end of his apprenticeship. But he could see bigger things in the west, and for him it was the proper thing to throw aside the bird in the hand, and grasp at the one singing to him in the bush. The reader may judge, but apparently he has caught the bird and capitalized the song.

When Clerk Has Customer's Confidence

Startling Comparison Between Capacity of Poor, Ill-Informed Clerk and One Who Knew His Goods—The Transaction in Pineapples—The Poor Clerk and Line of Fancy Groceries—Selling Six Cans Tomatoes When But Two Were Asked for—The Proprietors' Responsibility.

By Paul Thomson.

Anyone who watches the salesmanship ability displayed by clerks in different stores has amply demonstrated to him the reason why some clerks succeed and others fail.

In the first place the good salesman does not merely hand over the counter those goods which may be asked for but makes an effort to extend the sales of lines already carried and also to introduce new goods to customers. He must understand them all thoroughly and must be able to present his arguments to customers in a manner that will create sales.

The difference between the good and the bad salesmen is always defined if one has an opportunity of watching the two endeavoring to sell the same article.

In a grocery store the other day a customer enquired for canned pineapple. The clerk pulled a can off the shelf, pushed it across the counter, and said: "18 cents."

"Why, I bought them for 15 cents," said the customer; "just the other day too."

"Was the can as large as this?"

"Yes, just the same size."

"That's what we always charged for them," said the clerk, with an air of finality, as if to convince the customer that he had not made any mistake. But she did not buy.

Another Talk.

How different was the talk of another clerk on the same article. The second clerk was not asked for pineapple, but introduced it to the customer himself. There was a small display on the counter and after the customer had given her order he said: "How about some canned pineapple. Here is the —— brand at 18 cents. It makes a very delicious dessert."

"Why, I only paid 15 cents for them at Jones' last week."

"Those were probably in the light syrup, Mrs. Customer. They can be bought at 15 cents. These are in the heavy syrup and are much more delicious."

"I thought the syrup on the others was rather thin. I will try two cans of those."

"How about the other lines of canned goods, Mrs. Customer."

"Oh, I don't think I need any others to-day" she replied.

"You want to remember the saying, 'buy to-day for to-morrow's dinner.' Canned goods are handy to have in the house. Here is the —— brand tomatoes. They are a good solid tomato. Could I send you up a couple of those."

"Yes, you might as well send me a couple af cans," she assented.

Some Other Transactions.

Sales witnessed by The Grocer in stores recently showed that the dealer is a person who enjoys the confidence of customers, and whose word goes.

In one store a lady came in and ordered a couple of staples and then enquired for Blank's sauce.

"We do not keep that brand," said the merchant, "but I would like to show you another which is of excellent quality. This is —— brand."

"Mrs. Campbell says that she always uses Blank's and likes it fine."

"Yes," said the dealer, "Blank's put up a very good sauce, but I think this has a better taste. We have tried both on our own table and this is the choice that we made."

"Then I will try a bottle of that."

Salesmanship Ability.

In another case the customer had seen an article advertised in the paper and had been so impressed that she decided to try that brand. The dealer, however, did not handle that kind and showed his salesmanship ability by selling something "just as good."

"Give me a can of —— baking powder," asked the customer.

"We do not carry that brand," said the salesman. "How would it do if I sent you Blank's."

"No, I think I would rather have ——. I saw it advertised in the paper."

"Yes," answered the clerk, "that brand is being advertised quite extensively, but I assure you that for quality this is every bit as good. Before deciding on handling any goods, we always make a thorough test and I feel quite safe in offering you this." And so that part of the sale was completed.

In Selling Tomatoes.

"How about canned tomatoes," said the clerk. "We have —— brand. They are a good solid line and are put up by a reliable firm."

"You may send me up two cans of those."

"Will two cans be enough? They are a nice handy article to have in the house, as they can be prepared for a meal in a short time. They will keep for any reasonable length of time, you know."

"Well, I suppose that I might as well get a half dozen cans when I am at it," said she.

In another store information about goods was helpful in interesting a customer and a sale followed. The clerk was wrapping up a parcel of sugar and the customer, perhaps merely for something to say remarked, "Those are quite large pineapples."

Pineapples on Trees.

"Yes," said the clerk, "those are the larger size, known as 24s. I was reading the other night about the pineapple. I always had the idea that they grew on large trees."

"Do they not ?" inquired the customer, who seemingly had the same notion.

"No, they grow on a shrub about 3 feet high, only one pine growing on each plant. There is not so much waste in these larger ones. Those are nice and juicy," he said, "and make a splendid dessert fruit."

"I believe I will try a couple," replied the customer. The clerk had concluded his information by pointing out the good qualities of those particular ones in such a manner as to make a sale.

Sometimes one finds clerks who seem to take no interest in the making of sales at all. Even when they have been in the store for a considerable time, they do not know all the goods carried, where they are in the store, how much they are worth, what they are used for or any of the other essentials that go to make up a good clerk.

Such a clerk was discovered in a grocery store the other day. A customer entered and inquired for a certain line of fancy groceries which many stores do not carry. This store did but the clerk evidently had never considered pushing its sale, for when the customer enquired for it, he was a little uncertain as to whether they had it and at least did not know where it was, so he had to go to the back of the shop to enquire of the "boss." He had considerable trouble in locating it but at last got a package and handed it to the customer with, "that's what you wanted, isn't it ?"

An Uncertain Clerk.

"Yes," said the customer, "how much is this worth ?"

Again some more trouble for the clerk. "How much is this worth," he called to the boss, who was still at the back of the store.

The price was in this wise transmitted back to the customer, who then enquired regarding the quality of the goods and the clerk replied : "Yep, I think it's pretty good stuff."

Such a statement would not greatly impress a customer in regard to the quality, nor would she be altogether pleased with any part of the sale. What the boss should have done when the customer left was to inform the clerk that he wanted salesmen in his store and not dummies.

Proprietors to Blame.

Sometimes, proprietors are themselves responsible for a clerk's making a poor showing in selling goods, in that they constitute a poor example themselves in some cases. They neglect to point out to clerks just how they should proceed in making a sale. Sometimes a clerk will be found who hardly knows that a certain article is in stock. Sometimes he does not know the price and rarely any talking points in connection with it. This is the fault of the merchant who should have advised the clerk when the new article arrived, told him the price and given him some information that would help him to sell it.

Business Creed of a Successful Dealer

Customs Which One Proprietor Considers as of Vital Importance—Attention to Details and Personal Supervision of Individual Wants of Customers—Belief in Specialization of all Lines of Goods Carried—Cleanliness as an Essential—Methods to be Followed in Competing With Mail Order Houses.

Close attention to details and personal supervision of the individual wants of customers are two points which John F. Holloway considers as having been of vital importance in the building of his business which is located in an important residential section of Toronto.

He believes that these things are absolutely necessary to any grocer who has to meet the competition of progressive mail order houses. In following out this idea himself he has met with more than the usual measure of success. His business, taken over less than five years ago, shows an increase of nearly $35,000 a year, and it is still growing. Moreover, when it is considered that John Holloway left a good position with a prominent retail grocery house with but $100 to branch out in business for himself, the faith which he reposed in his own ideas becomes more apparent.

He has had, however, wide experience through having served his apprenticeship in some of the best retail establishments in the Old Land. The ideas he assimilated there, and the methods used there in handling good class trade, he has incorporated into his own business, and, of course, he has introduced new innovations as the ingenuity of those men working on new equipment for the grocer brought out new schemes from time to time.

To-day John Holloway has brought up his business to a fairly high level, and he entertains hopes for a still larger growth in the future. His ideas might be of interest to many retailers throughout the country, and The Grocer will give them in his own words:—

In Father's Store.

"My father," said Mr. Holloway, "was a grocer in the Old Land, and it was in his store that I gathered my first impressions of the grocery business. He was a good grocer. However, I soon drifted out to secure positions in other stores, and I can say without boasting, that I have worked in some of the best retail establishments in England. I mention this because it was in these stores I began to assimilate ideas of the trade which have been of wonderful assistance to me in this country, even if I have been here for the past eleven years.

"I might mention among the firms with which I was connected in England, those of Jackson in Cheltenham, and Cunnington & Skene in Richmond. The last-named establishment would be considered probably old-fashioned in this country, but had a splendid and a high-class trade. It was in that store I became accustomed to handling customers of high standing in society. It was a frequent occurrence in that store to have the Lord Mayor of London and the Duke of Teck come in and purchase their own supplies of goods. This will go to show something of the stability of the firm and the esteem in which it was held by its customers. That was twenty years ago. Later on I moved into Herefordshire in the town of Ross. There I obtained another experience of an altogether different character. The trade was not particularly high-class and was of a mixed nature. It was, however, extensive and good. On the one hand we had a wide farming community to cater to, while on the other was the famous forest of Dene. There were also collieries and other mining establishments so that you can see the trade in Ross was fairly wide-spread.

He Comes to Canada.

"Thus through it all I was able to gather quite a good experience on the handling of many different kinds of customers. Probably I would still be there had it not been that the manager of one of the great retail houses in this country had once occupied a similar position to mine in that town. He visited there on one occasion and talked to me of Canada. After he had returned to this country the desire grew on me to come to this country. I wrote him asking if he could provide a place for me. The answer came back almost immediately to come. I came. In that retail establishment I remained for nearly seven years. Probably also I would still be there had not one of my business friends, a retailer, persuaded me to strike out for myself. I can still feel the cold shivers running down my back when I think of the time I came to that decision. I had just about $100, and of course had to secure a good line of credit from the wholesales. But I came here and took over this business formerly run by B. Panter on the understanding that the turnover was about $20,000 a year. It didn't prove that to me, the total business amounting to not more than $15,000. The next year, 1905, it went up to $21,000, and this year it will go above $50,000. The annual increase can easily be figured from these turnovers.

Caters to Individuality.

"I believe in catering to the individual customer, and think it is along that line that every grocer must build up his business. Especially is this true of a city dealer who is compelled by force of circumstance to meet the competition of great and progressive mail order houses. He cannot close his doors sharp on the minute and neither can he refuse to deliver goods when wanted. He is beset by difficulties on every side, and it is only by the most careful thought that he keeps clear of all the business rocks that confront him. It is all very well to say that the retailer in Toronto can run his business on the same basis as the manager of a mail order house operates the grocery department of his establishment. There is no comparison between the two. On the one hand the department store has a wide-spread trade and has clerks in charge of each section. It is a well-known fact that any man who is able to devote his whole time to one particular line becomes wonderfully efficient in that line. For instance, a man weighing sugar day in and day out will become a machine depended upon to parcel up so many barrels of sugar per hour, and so many per day. All other departments are the same. The question of distribution and sale then becomes nothing more than a question in mathematics. The whole thing is systematized to a marvelous degree.

Humoring Cranks.

"Following out my argument, let us suppose that I put a man at my door to keep out all prospective customers, say at six o'clock in the evening, the system the mail order houses follow. How long do you think my people would stand for that treatment? Not very long. They come to me, I consider, simply because they can get individual handling of individual fads if they want it. That is why I have always given the closest kind of attention to the study of the characteristics of all my customers. And that is how I have succeeded in building up the trade I have now. Some women come in here with a special idea in some particular line of goods. They want "so-and-so" and they want it done up "so-and-so," and it should only cost "so-and-so." I don't believe in shutting off these people because it has always been my experience that their peculiarities were confined to one line of goods. What I lost, if ever I did lose, on that one thing I usually more than made up in some other line.

Departmentizing Business.

"I believe," continued Mr. Holloway, "in departmentizing business. My trade, however, is not big enough for me to do this, at least I feel that way about it. If it were I could put a man in charge of my provision department who would never have to leave that department. He could, I have no doubt, save me a great deal of money if only in the cutting of meats. And he would also be able to gather about him a class of customers who would come to hime even thought they moved away from that locality. I believe that implicity. And so with the other departments. My men would become specialists and so could cater in better fashion to the particular class of customer desiring those goods. But there are very few dealers in this country who really can afford to go in for that kind of thing because it always costs a great deal of money to take the plunge.

Afraid to Expand.

"It seems to me most of us grocers have a fault, no matter how apparently successful we are. I mean to say that very few of us would consent to spending $100 to-day even if we reasonably expected to gather in twice that amount in a few months' time. It's peculiar but it is so. I have such a question in my mind now. Take my confectionery department for an example. I intend adding another silent salesman to my equipment for that section and I have no doubt did I but place a young woman in charge of that alone she could build up lucrative trade. But you see the question of wages and expenses while all this is being done has to be considered, and although I feel sure of the ultimate profit, it is just a moot point whether the young lady will be appointed or not. I am inclined to think that when the time comes the department will simply be added to the rest of the business, and yet I have a pretty fair volume of trade in candy lines.

Cutting Prices.

"I don't believe in cutting prices. When my head clerk comes to me and says: 'Jones, down the street, is selling a certain line of canned goods three for a quarter, and is also selling more sugar for the dollar than we do. Hadn't we better meet his price? I have always said: That's all right but if you start this thing where are you going to stop?

"It's all very well to meet Jones' competition, but supposing Brown starts to cut in some other line, logically I should have to cut to meet him also. So I have just continued the even tenor of my ways and refused to cut for any man. Probably I have lost a good many customers, but I have always been content to let them go because I believed they were not the best class of customers for me to hold on to. The cut-rate trade I have always considered as not a good class, and personally I don't believe it ever will be. It is the business that comes in one or two lines alone that happens to be cut. When other things are wanted they go somewhere else. It is at best only a transient trade and might come to me one day and go to someone else on the others. I have never regretted my stand in holding out for fair prices.

Should Have Abundant Help.

"Another thing I don't believe in is cutting down in the quantity of help in the store or refusing to add to it when the business demands that it be done. But while I say I don't believe in this, probably it could be held up to me that I have not been as prompt in adding to my staff as I should have. I have four men now, and I should have five, because there are times in the day when these four men cannot handle the trade that offers itself. I believe there should be always just a little more help than there is business to handle. That generally leaves one clerk available to catch anyone coming in. I think that is one of the principal rules that should be followed if any man is to rise to success. I hope I will be able to carry it out myself in the future.

Cleanliness a Watchword.

"I believe absolutely in cleanliness of store, refrigerator, and cellar, and in carrying the best line of goods that can be bought to suit the individual requirements of the customer. I believe in good fixtures because they tend to brighten the store and to convey a general atmosphere of prosperity to the mind of the trade you are catering to.

I believe in good store equipment, although I never went in for fads. Every new piece of equipment that I have put in has proved a dividend producer for me. Scales and cash systems, vegetable display stands and other innovations have all returned their cost and more to me. I believe that no dealer should try to get along without at least the necessary time-savers unless he absolutely cannot afford it.

Moving "Stickers."

"There is one thing I have not developed to a system and I feel that I should have done so. That is in connection with the getting rid of slow stocks. I don't mean to say that I haven't disposed of such goods because at the present time I don't believe I have $50 worth of "stickers" in the establishment. But I mean that I have never brought the thing down fine enough as to know when to take the first loss and make it the only loss. In that regard I have lost money because I have refused to cut say to 10 cents when I later on had to let the stuff go at 5 cents. That is what I mean by finding out just when to take the first loss and be content. When you do that you save money in the end. At the present time I have a table which I set in the front part of the store and use it for the display of goods I want to move out. Usually I put price tickets on this stuff so that the time of the clerks is not taken up unless a purchase is in view.

His Creed.

"So that is my creed. I believe in close attention to details and personal supervision of the individual wants of individual customers; the cleanliness of the store and all its furnishings; order in the stock room, and the use of all equipment which will tend to make labor lighter and save time of the clerks, the specialization of help as far as possible and the holding up of prices so that a fair profit can be obtained in all departments."

"I am absolutely and entirely opposed to the giving of discounts in any shape or form. When a customer is given fair value for money received there is no need in my opinion for a grocer to give out one or two per cent. of his legitimate profit to hold that or any other business. In the first place there are very few of us who really make a profit large enough to warrant the giving of such a discount. I know that is so in my case, but if I did I never would consent to handing out with the left hand what I take in with the right. But I have never needed to do this.

Switched Community's Demand for Tea

How London Dealer in Taking Over Store Refused to Stock Up Certain Line of Tea—The Crucial Test With One Customer —Belief in Selling Power of Newspaper Advertising — The Grinding of Coffee—Association.

IN the building up of Harry Ranahan's business in London, Ont., there stands out an exhibition of salesmanship that is seldom outclassed these days.

When "Harry" took over his present business some years ago a steady demand for one particular line of tea went with it. He had never stocked this line because he had always considered that the margin of profit allowed by the shipper was not large enough to compensate for the trouble of handling it. Accordingly he foresaw no end of trouble in switching the trade of customers cultivated to one line, to another, even if he was firmly convinced that the tea he desired to substitute was equally as good, or for that matter, price for price better than the one carried by the former occupant of the store. But at any rate he did not stock the former tea.

The Crucial Test.

Through extensive and persistent advertising in the papers his name became known pretty well all over London, and there were many who knew of him and his place of business whom he did not have any acquaintance with. One day shortly before noon a man telephoned him, one of these men whom he did not know, and requested that he call at his house during that noon hour as he wished to see him. Mr. Ranahan went He found the man in question, a trainman, anxious to change from another dealer and to transfer his account to him. The request was granted. Then the lady of the house, informed Mr. Ranahan that she had always been accustomed to buy —— tea, mentioning the price.

"I am sorry madam," the dealer replied, "but I never have stocked that line of tea.

"But I have always been accustomed to get that kind. I like it and my husband likes it, and I don't see how we can very well change. I suppose you could arrange to get in at least a limited supply for my special use.

"Oh yes, I could," replied Mr. Ranahan, "but personally I cannot see why you should want to pay 5 cents more a pound for your tea than you should have to pay."

"Why no, certainly not," broke in the head of the house, "we do not want to pay any more than is necessary for any line of groceries."

"Well I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll send up a pound of tea I have in stock for you to try, and will let you have it for 25 cents. Now if this is not as good in every sense of the term as the beverage you formerly purchased at 30 cents I will give it to you for nothing.

Customer Satisfied.

"They tested the tea," continued Mr. Ranahan, "and the result was that they have taken nothing else since that time, and are entirely satisfied with the change. Of course I was too, because it meant larger profit for me on the transaction. So I have been using that incident with good effect in every case where a demand is made for that particular line. Usually the argument that points to their securing an equal quality of tea for less money has a telling effect, and I have lost few customers on that account. Had they insisted on securing that one kind, I doubt if I would have met them in the matter, because I do not believe in handling any article that does not return to me a living profit.

"At the present time I have but very few of these lines of goods in stock. In fact all of them could be contained in about three feet of shelving. As it is I keep those hidden away, and never suggest their sale. They are stocked only to satisfy people who absolutely insist on securing them. Travelers who come in wonder why it is their lines do not move out faster, and I tell them out and out that I do not try to sell them.

Coffee Grinding.

"And even as I have made a success in working out my tea trade in this way, I can probably say the same for my coffee business," continued Mr. Ranahan. "I believe there is a good deal of selling power in the custom of grinding coffee just when it is demanded by customers when they come in the store. It is very well to grind up several pounds, and leave it to fill the demands for a day or longer, but I am of the opinion that when coffee of this kind is asked for it should be ground right on the spot. The frequent working of the mill fills the air with the fragrant aroma of this beverage and I think it sells a great deal more coffee than people imagine. There is a suggestiveness about it that causes people's attention to turn to it as soon as they come into the store, even though they had no thought of buying it before they entered."

The Problem of Selling Tea.

Believes in Advertising.

This dealer is a great believer in the selling power of newspaper advertising. He believes absolutely in telling all the people he can all about the goods he handles as often as he can. And he doesn't believe in running stereotyed copy day after day. He is always racking his brains to work out some catchy phrase to attract the attention of the average reader, and that he does do this is evident by the large trade he does by a medium of the telephone,

He also believes in the fullest possible use of his window space as a selling medium for certain lines of goods. He is of the opinion that this display should be made as attractive as possible and knows for a certainty that time and again his window has created demand which otherwise would probably not have materialized at all. In this connection he mentions oranges and pineapples. Now and then he works in a display of these fruits, and he says that in every case the sales during the next day or two were always much heavier than any other.

Expects a Fair Profit.

But in every case Mr. Ranahan endeavors to sell only such lines of goods as return to him a reasonable margin of profit. That is the central idea of his whole business. He believes that he can push certain lines of goods at advantage to himself and that he can also hide away certain other lines of goods, and bring them out only when absolutely demanded. He considers that he has demonstrated that fact in changing the style and character of the demand for tea that held when he first took charge of the store. He is not averse to going far afield for his supplies, believing that so long as he gets good quality articles he does not need to worry about where they are made.

Value of Organization.

Mr. Ranahan has also very definite ideas on the benefits to be derived by the average grocer from co-operation and association with fellow dealers. He believes the lot of the small man would be improved considerably if he would meet others in the trade oftener than is now the case. In the opinion of the London man it would be a good thing for every dealer to be joined in one great national association, which would be as the name implies representative of the trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Some such vision as this he is hoping for although he has no definite idea as to the methods to be used in its accomplishment. So far he has only been preaching the advantages to be gained in frequent meeting of dealer with dealer, in the exchanging of ideas of different localities, and in the powerful influence such an organization would exert, whether sentimental or otherwise, on the minds of people who would have to sell them goods.

"It is a pity that the grocers are so jealously afraid of one another," concluded Mr. Ranahan. "If it were otherwise we might be able to accomplish something by standing together with the good of one considered as the good of all.

Regulation of Insurance Conditions

Insurance Expert Declares That in Reforms the State of New York Leads the Continent—Massachusetts Much to be Commended—Great Value of the Research Work Carried on by Merritt Committee—Report to Legislature Most Important—Combination Necessary to Equitable Rating.

By E. P. Heaton.
(Manager Insurance Department Canadian Manufacturers' Association.)

THERE is an old saying in the North of England to this effect—"What Lancashire thinks to-day, the people of England think to-morrow." This may be the outgrowth of self-opinionated public opinion in the Northern County, but it passes for more than a joke.

On the continent of North America, and including our own Dominion, the great State of New York is generally recognized as a pivotal state in matters of insurance, and it may be said with truth and unchallanged that in this particular phase of commercial activity "What New York thinks and does to-day, the rest of the Continent thinks and does to-morrow." In making this statement I am not unmindful of the part that has been played by the State of Massachusetts, which state may be acknowledged as blazing the trail of Mutual Insurance Organizations, of pioneering effective insurance control, and of setting an excellent example in investigating fires by the employment of competent fire marshals. For all these, and more, Massachusetts is much to be commended; nevertheless, when the Continent requires to be stirred and shaken to its outermost circumference New York State has been and will, no doubt, continue to be the storm centre.

Making of Hughes.

On reading the title given to this article one intuitively recalls the Armstrong Committee, which made the name and fame of ex-Governor Hughes, but which proved the undoing of many mighty men in the world of finance. Nor does one forget the stir that followed in Canada in the appointment of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance, nor of its disregard of the effect of evidence brought before it on the future of strong men in other spheres. This is now history !

In New York State another committee has concluded its work, but inasmuch as the temptation to use large funds in a questionable manner, which was shown to have been, at the time of the Armstrong investigation, one of the weak points in the system of life insurance was not found to exist in fire insurance (the principal cause of the appointment of this latest committee), the absence of scandal and intrigue in high financial life has unfortunately undermined the importance of the work and findings of the committee, and in the opinion and judgment of the writer one of the most important reports ever made to a Legislative body is being shunted and side-tracked and is not receiving the attention to which it is entitled. This is so, as far as the Canadian press is concerned ; at all events, I have seen scarcely a passing notice of the work or recommendations of the committee even in papers pleased to designate themselves "Insurance and Financial."

Most Complete Report.

Because of the great value of the research work carried on, and of the most complete report filed with the New York Legislature by the Merritt Committee on February 1st, 1911, I offer no apology for a review of the same in the columns of Canadian Grocer.

The resolution appointing a joint committee of the Senate and Assembly directed them :—

"To investigate as speedily as possible . . . the business methods, operation, management, supervision and control of all Insurance Companies other than those doing life insurance business. including fire insurance exchanges and state local boards of fire underwriters, and relations of such companies, exchanges and boards with legislation... to the end that such remedial legislation may be enacted or changed . . . as will prevent a recurrence of any abuse or evils disclosed."

The sessions of the committee lasted from September 27th, 1910, to January 6th, 1911, during which 184 witnesses were examined and 5,500 pages of oral evidence and 1,500 pages of documentary evidence were received. It will be at at once apparent therefore, that the work of investigation was exhaustive, thorough and complete, and that its findings ought not only to be received with the greatest respect, but entitled to the most respectful consideration.

Where Investigation Centred.

The report of the committee embracing 164 pages of closely-printed matter is divided into six sections. With the first five we have no concern, even the committee itself did no more than dip into the subjects grouped under these five headings, but the sixth section dealing with—

"The business methods, operation, supervision and control of fire insurance companies, exchanges, and state and local boards of fire underwriters" was the one upon which the investigation centred. Our review of the report is confined to this sixth and last section—

The committee, recognizing the technical character of the subject and the desirability that it should be presented in a logical and consecutive manner, attempted, so far as it was possible, to take up its details according to the following plan :

"The companies and their relation to the State—State supervision.

"Statistics regarding the amount and character of the fire insurance business.

"The organizations among the companies.

"The principles involved in the furnishing of fire insurance indemnity.

"The interior organization of a company—its officers and agents.

"The actual detailed work of a company—getting and doing business.

"The settlement of losses—adjusting.

"The theory of rating.

"Rating organizations.

"The New York Fire Insurance Exchange.

"The Suburban Fire Insurance Exchange.

"The Underwriters' Association of New York State—the Up-state Association.

"Factory Mutual Insurance Companies.

"Miscellaneous Mutual Insurance Companies.

"Town and County Co-operative Insurance Companies.

"Inter-insurance Associations.

"Lloyds.

"Local agents and their problems—the expense problem.

"Brokers.

"Complaints by the insured and the answers thereto by the companies.

"Fire prevention."

This is an ambitious programme for a committee to undertake, even although they were aided by legal and expert assistance, but no one reading the report can deny but that the work was well and thoroughly done, and that the conclusions reached are mostly sane and wholly impartial.

An Unusual Arrangement.

The manner of arranging the report is somewhat unusual, but is nevertheless simple, clear and logical—qualities often missing in a work of this kind. It will be borne in mind that I am only reviewing Section No. 6 of the report, and that section is divided again into two parts—the first takes up the items involved in the plan previously outlined, and is based upon the evidence submitted during the investigation and with this remark we may leave it.

Part 2 of Section No. 6 is a careful analysis of the problems involved and some of these are worthy of special emphasis as bearing upon similar problems met with in our own Canadian experience.

It will be manifest that many of the items have a particularly local application and these I shall pass over. Others, however, while being local in character involve principles common to both countries, and I select some of these for more extended reference. As the object of this article is to present the views of a committee of able men, presented in a most able and impartial manner, I intend to let the report speak for itself by numerous quotations and extracts. It will, therefore, be understood that the views are not those of the writer, but of the committee, observations of the writer will be indicated as such.

Question of Rates.

"The difficult problems of the fire insurance business all centre in one way or another about the subject of rates. This is an important matter in any business, but in fire insurance there are difficulties and peculiarities that make it particularly important. In a manufacturing business the price of an article is largely determined by the cost of production and this can, in general, be definitely ascertained. In a mercantile business the selling price is determined by the buying price.

"In fire insurance companies in which the assessments are made after the losses, the rating problem has no particular difficulty ; but in stock companies, where the premium is collected in advance, the anomalous condition arises that a price must be set to pay for something that has not happened and may not happen at all.

"The price has, therefore, to be based upon the 'expectations' of loss, or the 'Hazard' as it is called. What should be the rates for a planing-mill and for a fire-proof office building ? This is equivalent to saying, 'what is the hazard of each,' or in other scarcely more illuminating words, 'What is the expectation of burning of each.'

The Armstrong Committee which Made the Name and Fame of ex-Governor Hughes and Proved the Undoing of so Many Mighty Men.

"Fortunately there is one guide in this matter, the past ; otherwise the problem would be quite hopeless. If experience has shown that out of every thousand planing-mills there are the equivalent of twenty-five total losses, and, if this planing-mill is deemed typical of the thousand, a rate of $2.50 per $100 of insurance should prevail (this is without loading for expense) ; if the mill is deemed to be below the average of the mills upon which the experience is based, 'underwriting judgment' must be invoked, in lieu of more precise knowledge, to decide how much larger the rate must be.

Rate Measures Destruction.

"Theoretically the rate measures the destruction that would occur in some thousands of just such buildings under just such conditions ; practically, what the underwriter has to work on is what has happened to buildings that in certain respects resembles this one, and the problem of rating is the adaptation of this experience to the particular risk in hand.

"Granted that the problem of rating is very difficult ; the practical result is that it is impossible to make rates properly on the basis of a single company's experience. The experience even of the largest companies is not extensive enough to insure the proper workiog of the law of averages on all classes. It is very natural, then, and from this point of view desirable that the companies should, for this purpose, combine ; for not only can they thus make rates more effectively but, since rates on the same classes are needed by all, it would be a useless expense to have the work duplicated. So far, therefore, as the making of rates goes, it is desirable that the companies should combine ; but in actual practice the combinations of the companies are not only to make rates but to maintain them, and the desirability of this is another question which will be discussed later."

Open Competition.

"We have now to consider the effect of open competition in fire insurance. It is not necessary to theorize about this for there is plenty of evidence in the rate wars which were formerly carried on and which to some degree still prevail. The universal effect of such periods of open competition wherever and whenever they have occurred has been a cutting of rates to a point that was below the actual cost of the indemnity. If the rate war had been general this would have meant the ultimate death of the company, and rate wars of even a local character, lead, if long continued, to the dissolution of the smaller and weaker companies. The mutual character of insurance is so strong that nothing which tends to produce inferior protection can be for the public good. It has not done the policy-holder any good to get cheap insurance if, when the test comes, the protection is found to be worthless.

"The fact that rates are controlled by competition, and not entirely by the hazard, is shown also by the experience of the companies on sprinklered risks. The Mill Mutuals, as is well known, were the pioneers in what has resulted in a revolution in the construction and equipment, from a fire-preventive point of view, of factories. The plan of standardization and inspection which was adopted by the Mill Mutuals, and which is referred to in more detail elsewhere in this report, was so successful that the stock companies, in order to retain even a share of this business, were forced to adopt the very same plan. To this end associations were formed, one with headquarters in Hartford, and one with headquarters in Chicago, known as the Factory Insurance Associations. Some twenty of the principal companies are members of these organizations.

Combination and Equity.

"Our conclusion, then, is that combination and equity in rates should be inseparable ; not only has experience shown that equitable rates are impossible in the absence of combination, but conversely, if there is to be combination then out of it must (by the help of law if competition is not sufficient) come equitable rates ; that is, IF COMPANIES ARE TO BE ALLOWED TO COMBINE THEN IT MUST BE ONLY ON THE ASSURANCE THAT THE RATES WILL BE EQUITABLE.

"The state is certainly justified in taking any steps necessary to see that this condition is maintained.

"The nature of competition in fire insurance is certainly very different from that in most other enterprises. To compete with a railroad it is necessary to build a new line, and when it is there it is there once for all and must be maintained unless the investment is to be a total loss. But the investment in a fire insurance company consists entirely of securities ; there is no plant to speak of, even the agency system consists for the most part of agents who are already in the field for other companies. It is, therefore, a business that capital can be very readily thrown into and from which it can be just as readily extracted—usually, by re-insuring.

Dearth of Business.

"It is a business, furthermore, in which competition is very intense—for this reason : Outside of the large cities the business of the country could be done by a dozen companies, but in large cities there is a dearth of insurance—this is because of the conflagration hazard—150 companies are bidding for the business that could be done by a dozen ; the competition is, therefore, very keen, since it is necessary that each should have a slice to balance the business which is exposed to a conflagration.

"Beside the competition of companies that are inside the organization, board companies, so-called, there is in general a competition from the non-board companies. These companies, not being members of the organization, are not bound to observe any particular schedule of rates. As a matter of fact they inform themselves with regard to the board rates and to a degree observe them, cutting the rate where it becomes necessary to secure desirable business. The competition of the non-board companies of course tends to keep the board rates down. In most parts of the country there are many non-board companies In New York City, however, the companies that are authorized by the state are all members of the Exchange."

Rating and Competition.

Having thus freely quoted important sections of the report on the allied subjects of Rating and Competition, it is well that I should now explain that my purpose in so doing is to make way for what I conceive to be one of the most important, almost startling conclusions, stated by this committee, viz. :—

"It has been demonstrated by the experience of all times and all places that open competition in fire insurance is an unstable condition which leads to the general weakening of the companies, and eventually to the elimination of small companies, further, that under open competition there is always discrimination in favor of the policy-holder with influence.

The Only Alternative.

"The only alternative to open competition is, however, combination not merely to make but to maintain rates.

This in general or certainly to a degree makes it impossible for the public to obtain insurance except at the prices fixed by the combination. This inability to bargain is resented by the public and the rate-making organizations have been referred to as trusts and combinations in restraint of trade.

"NOT ONLY IS COMBINATION NECESSARY FOR EQUITABLE RATING, BUT CONVERSELY THE MAKING OF EQUITABLE RATES IS THE CONSIDERATION WHICH SHOULD BE DEMANDED OF THE COMPANIES FOR THE RIGHT TO COMBINE."

Educate the Public to Quality Goods

Heartburning Expressed by Winnipeg Wholesaler Who Deplores The Never-Ending Fight Between Dealers to Cut Prices Down to a Level Inconsistent With the Doing of Business—The Folly of the Merchant Who Builds on Price, and the Wisdom of Building on Quality.

IT all happened in the office of a Winnipeg wholesaler. He was not talkative, and it was seen by the two visitors that some subject of interest would have to be introduced to put him into a talkative mood. One of the visitors had just witnessed a sale of rice in a grocery store in which the lowest grade had been sold at the lowest profit. Naturally his mind turned to that.

"Has there been any improvement in the quality of rice sold in this country of late," he asked.

The proper topic had been touched upon. The wholesaler manifested interest immediately and he began to throw off some of the philosophy he had been pondering on.

"Yes, there has been some improvement in the quality of rice," he said, "but it has been slow, very slow indeed, much slower than I would like. It's a pity, for the better grades of goods are the best to the merchant who sells it and to the consumer who uses it."

The Spirit of False Economy.

"Say, do you know," he said, assuming the attitude of a professor lecturing a fractious pupil, and pointing his revolver finger straight at the visitor who had asked the question "that the people of this country, perhaps more so than any other, equally civilized, are seemingly filled with a spirit of false economy."

"Take for instance, tea," he continued. "Cannot the people of this country see that buying a cheap tea and having to use twice the quantity is not saving money, cannot they see besides that the flavor is lacking in the lower grade teas."

"Now in Ireland, down-trodden country as it is, and from which stories of poverty have always been coming, I am informed that the cheapest tea that the retailer sells is worth 80 cents per pound. Think of that ! While here"—and he plainly exhibited his disgust at the state of affairs—"If you ask them 40 cents a pound for tea they will holler as is you had jumped on their toes with both feet. In many parts of this country even now, you will find farmers who would withdraw their trade from a dealer who charged them 40c for tea. As long as it is tea they seem to be satisfied and thus they force the dealer to sell 25 cent tea on which he makes little profit and which in the end is not as cheap to the customer as are the higher grades."

Farmer as "Cheap John."

He shifted his weight to another position showing that he had not completed his oration, and continued, "When you come to think of it, the farmers of this country are the biggest bunch of "cheap Johns" possible. It must be admitted that there are some who are not in this class, but take the large percentage and they are hunting for the cheapest thing that can be bought. Those who go in for produce bring in their good butter and eggs and sell them at high prices and then go home and eat some old cheap fat pork, instead of acting like sensible people and keeping some of their own wholesome food at home."

"It is no wonder that they are not healthy, eating all the cheapest food that can be scraped together. And then when they get sick, what do they do ? Do they go to a doctor and get professional service ? No ; they again follow false economy and dose themselves with some cure-all patent medicine. Even in this they do not buy the best but are still looking for the cheapest."

Fault of the Merchant.

"This lack of regard for quality in the goods which they purchase is to a large extent the fault of the merchants. Instead of making quality the key note of their business, it is cheapness instead.

"John Jones and Tom Smith are grocers doing business side by side. Jones puts an article in his window and marks it at 10 cents. Now, Smith will be in a terrible state of mind until he gets something similar that he can, by close clipping, sell at 9 cents. And of course, it is an inferior article and the profit on it very small. Instead of educating the people up to the use of the best grades which also pay the best profits, they are trying to build up a business on price.

"I have followed merchandising for some years now and have made a careful study of it and know that the merchant who is going to stay in business must sell quality goods.

Building on Quality.

"Actual cases have demonstrated this fact time and time again. Two stores start up in the same town. No. 1 is making price the foundation on which he builds his business while No. 2 is building on quality. For a time No. 1 does a good business because low prices will attract people. But which is the one to stay the longer ? Which one is it whose trade continues steadily on the increase without any set back ? It will be found to be No. 2, everytime, the fellow who builds on quality. The price man is like a skyrocket. For a time he makes a big flare but it soon dies down."

Pointing His Revolver Finger.

And having thus expressed himself, much of which, it has to be admitted is true, he turned again to his work, and the visitors silently departed.

JUST BE CHEERY.

Cheerfulness is at once a tonic and an inspiration. A smile is a good investment—an honest, cheerful laugh sells goods—it disarms suspicion — it transmits a wireless call for business. Cheerfulness is contagious—you cannot look an honest, good-natured chap in the eye and hold a grouch. Every good salesman—every successful business man — knows this. He knows the commercial value of a smile. A true salesman walks straight into the confidence of his customer by the grace of a pleasing manner. Courtesy and cheerfulness are part of the salesman's stock in trade—they are an asset in every business — they are the legal tender in every country—they are the passwords between all peoples.

Some Book-keeping Methods

Financial Standing on One Diary Page

Simple and Novel System Worked Out and Followed by a Dealer in Maintaining Watch on His Bank Account—How He Guards Against Giving Check When no Funds in Bank to Meet it.

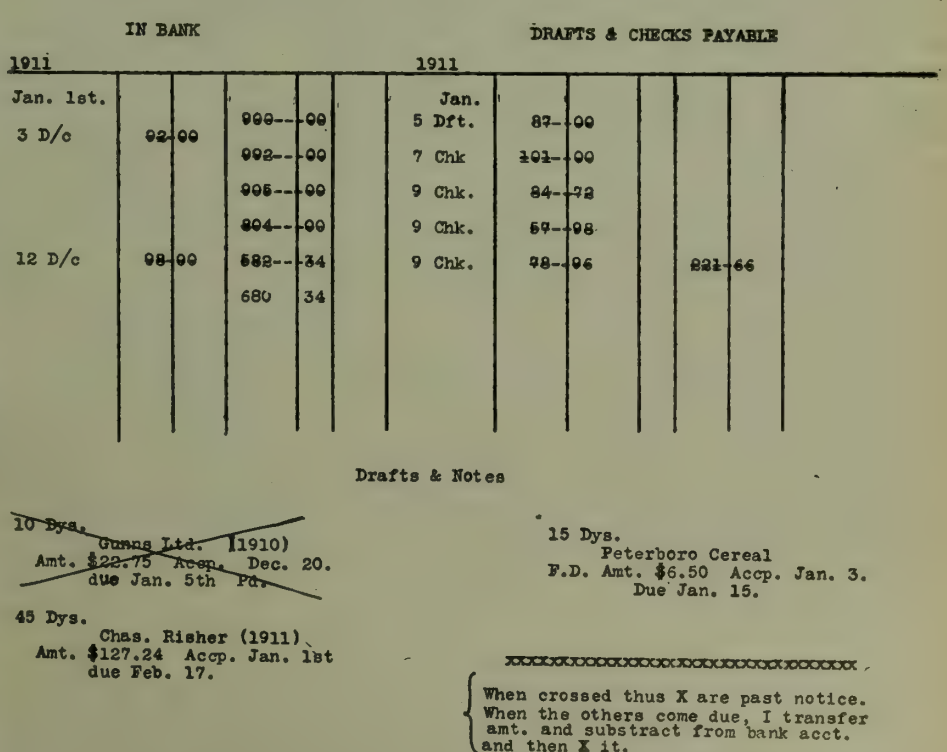
FOR some time, just for my own benefit, I have been endeavoring to work out some simple system by which one could avoid the overdrawal of the bank account. The result of my studies might be of service to other grocers and so I write this article.

I read in The Grocer that a bill was to go before the Ontario Legislature to prevent the giving of checks when the maker had no funds to meet it. Now that is just what my system is good for. It makes a man feel sure of the amount he has in the bank, and will help him to prevent issuing a check when there is no funds, unless, of course, he wishes to do so designedly. I knew my idea was alright and could be made practicable, but I made a bungling mess for the few attempts in not getting the figures in the proper place on as small a space as possible, and with neatness, but now, I think I have succeeded.

Where Check Stubs Fail.

My idea is to know just what a man has in the bank at all times no matter where he may be. True, we can keep tab on the check stubs, I have done so, but found there was not ample room for checks, drafts, notes, etc. Besides we don't carry the stubs about with us, and our bank book will only tell us what we have put in the bank and does not show what the bank has paid out for us until the end of the month when the book is balanced up.

Our book of bills payable and receivable will also tell us how we stand so far as drafts are concerned and that too is not always at our command. A man may be asked on the street for a check in settlement of an account and he may get it if the party knows how his account is at the bank. Otherwise he will probably be asked to go back to the office, the party owing wishing to see how his bank account is by looking it up himself, or by having his bookkeeper do so. If he finds that he is about even, I think its a good bet he says to his creditor "call on—day," pending another deposit during the interval, than to give him a check that he knows will be refused at the bank.



Draft Got Start of Him.

Drafts are becoming more in vogue and I like them but we sometimes forget about a draft becoming due and think we have more in the bank than we have. I made a mistake more than once in giving a check when I was sure there were funds to cover it, and I thought I was keeping a close watch, but a draft got the start of me. With my new plan I can offer no excuse for a mistake, as I know at any time or anywhere how I stand by just referring to my little vest pocket diary, and, do you know, I believe a man makes money by keeping it. When he looks at it and knows that his bank account is none too healthy, it has a tendency to make him more careful and spend less money on luxurious or unnecessary articles. If he can meet all obligations at the bank and don't give much credit, he will soon find that he is getting his stock paid for if he even should not have much ready cash. I wish I knew my way round in giving you my views and get more to the point with less writing.

The following demonstration will explain.

The Demonstration.

J. B. has in the bank on Jan. 1st, $900. On Jan. 3rd he deposits $92, making $992. On Jan. 5th a draft is due for $87 (which the bank will pay), the latter taken from the $992 will leave to J.B.'s credit $905. On Jan. 7th he issues a check for $101, leaving in bank $804. On Jan. 9th he gives three checks as follows: $84.72, $57.98 and $78.96. This $221.66 taken from $804 will leave

The Page of Mr. Donovan's Diary Showing How He Keeps Track of His Bank Standing and the Dates Upon Which His Drafts Fall Due.

$582.34. On Jan 12th he deposits $98 placing to his credit again $680.34 and so on down, drafts on left leaf being for deposit and draft on right leaf meaning draft, check for cash. When a change is made or something done with these foregoing figures a line is drawn through them as per example on diary sheet.

Watching the Drafts.

In another part of same diary, I keep account of when drafts are accepted ; in whose favor ; the amount ; when same falls due. Every morning I look this account over to see if any drafts are due that day and if such is the case I substract the amount from the bank account as per explanation, and again, in the evening see that I have all checks accounted for issued during the day. But usually I put them down when given, so that every morning before any banking business is done, I know just how I stand.

I like this plan now, as it is so simple, there is no bother, and best of all, no guess work about it. I would consider it a good idea for any merchant like myself and it would probably prove convenient for many larger ones.

I would have suggested to keep all checks out of the way unless there are ample funds to meet all demands. Checks are more home and local affairs. There the debtor is under the eye of his creditor, and if in difficulty a new arrangement and an amicable settlement can often be arrived at between the parties concerned. But as for drafts, they are more generally from outside and should be given the preference and honored, being presented by different banks for acceptance.

The Home-Made System of Picton Dealer

Simple Arrangement Worked Out for Proper Care of All Accounts—Simplified Method of Handling All Invoices — The Scheme of Registration—Small Box Holds Accounts of All Customers of Store—Cost Was Insignificant.

Beverly McDonald, Picton, Ont., has a bookkeeping system so compact, while home-made, that he has been able to condense the business of one year and a half in a little tea box only slightly more than a foot long. He made a study of this question considering it one of the important problems of the grocery trade, and the system he has evolved is one that meets his requirements to a nicety.

The work involved in taking care of all his accounts so that he could know at any time just how everything stood was wont to worry Mr. McDonald. There used to be a great deal of writing and he found that a good deal of time was taken up in this way which should have been turned to some other, and more valuable occupation only the proper system need be worked out. He went to work on the problem about a year and a half ago. The answer didn't come to him all at once, and he says he does not really know where the original inspiration came from. He admits that probably while on a visit somewhere he saw some system displayed from which the idea started in his own mind. Anyway, he has it, and it works, and that is the principal point as far as he is concerned.

"I worked out this scheme," said Mr. McDonald to The Grocer, "because I wanted to be able to systematically keep track of all my discounts, all my accounts, and all my cash transactions in as simple and concise a manner as possible." He then explained the working as follows :

The "System."

"In a little box about a foot and a half long and 5 or 6 inches wide and as many deep on top of my desk and in easy reach of all the clerks I keep an indexed list of all my customers and their accounts. These are separated, one from the other, by tin sheets with the name of each customer pasted on at the top of each sheet, the remaining portion of the tin at the top, being cut away. The sheets are then set in in rotation first with a name to the left and next with the name to the right so that each name is always in clear view. The idea is to take the last duplicate sheet upon which payment has been made on a credit account and put it in this index system, so that a glance will show just how much the customer owes without there being any figuring at all. This amount is carried on to the check book of the customer concerned so that the next time she purchases anything the new liability is added and the total carried forward again.

Seems Complicated.

"The explanation would seem to make this system rather complicated and difficult to handle. In reality, however, the working out of it is simple, and there is little work to do. With the close of each day's work the exact status of every account is indexed in this way on the last order duplicate sheet of the customer, so that next day when business resumes there is no difficulty about the standing of any customer. She may come in when she will and pay so much on account and there is no loss of time in finding out just how much she owes. If there is any dispute the duplicate sheets from the check book are there to speak for themselves. But we never have had any trouble at all.

Invoices Similarly Treated.

"All our invoices are treated much in similar fashion. They too are kept in a card indexed system, which is maintained in the big lower drawer of my desk. As an invoice comes in from a manufacturer or a wholesaler it is checked over, and entered in a book are the amount, the discount, and when it is due. This invoice is placed in its proper division in the system and as the book is always ready on the desk there is never any possibility of losing the cash coming back to me by the discount route. When payment is made the date and amount are entered in the discount book on the same page so that each transaction is begun and completed on the same line on the same page of one book. Then as the invoices are marked paid they are stored away for future reference in any box that you may care to use for the purpose.

Bookkeeping Simplified.

"The balance of the bookkeeping system is equally simplified. Each day in a cash and salesbook we keep on one page a record of the number of registrations made by the cash register (which is to say the number of times it is rung up during the day), the number and amount of credit sales, the number and amount of "received on account" payments, the total cash received and paid out, the debtor and credit columns, and total cash. All these are confined to one page, so that it is possible to have a whole month's business entered on one page of the ledger.

"Whenever I want to look up any particular day's business I never have to go to more than one book to find it out. This system is equally valuable to my mind when it comes to comparing any one day or week with any other day or week. It also leaves a man so that he can look back and see what he has done during the week, an Saturday night before he closes up shop. There is never any trouble about it. We have never received any complaints or had any accounts disputed, and the clerks consider it a great time-saver. It also saves me the expense of carrying a bookkeeper or doing that work myself.

Cost Insignificant.

"The cost is insignificant. I went over to the tinsmith and got him to cut me out the little sheets of tin and also to slice off the top, half way over, so that I could past the name on the other half and leave a space to see the next one ahead. The tea box didn't cost anything because I had it myself and neither did the little oblong container I use to keep the record of the accounts of the customer. It saves me in outlay for ledger books because I hardly use one book a year.

A Successful Easter Window.

Residents of Brantford, Ont., and vicinity will probably recognize this window. It is one of those used at Easter time by the Cash Bargain Grocery in the Telephone City, and it is claimed that it proved a big success.

The arrangement is tasteful and attractive, and all of the constituents are strictly seasonable. No doubt many a weary passerby experienced a feeling of pleased relief glancing at that window, so redolent of a pleasant meal in that period of fast and waiting. The eggs and chicks, and lard and hams and bacon and cheese are all neatly put in, and there is no doubt as Arthur Harp, the man who built it says, that it induced a considerable volume of trade.

It Thrives in Residential District

A Short Description of the Career of George Rogers, Who Runs the Establishment Pictured Below—Built Five Years Ago Under His Supervision, and is Commodious and Compact—Considers Himself Cured of Follies of Youth, and Does Not Cut Prices—Believes in Early Closing.

The illustration given below is that of an interior view of the store of George Rogers on College St., Toronto. It was built for him five years ago under his own supervision, and is most commodious and yet compact. The photograph hardly does justice to it.

The left hand side which is well arranged for the display of all kinds of bottled goods and different lines of biscuits is not well shown. Then at the back of the store, near the door opening to the store room beyond there is a provision counter and canned goods display that is also interesting, and is barely visible. On the second counter on the right hand side there is a computing scale which is hidden, and the cash register in the centre is barely noticeable.

It may be noted that the ceiling of this store presents an unusually neat and clean appearance. It IS clean and neat. Also in the ceiling near the left hand corner of the picture there is a sky-light nearly six feet long which connects with the outer air and supplies daylight into the establishment until well on to closing time during most of the year.

Mr. Rogers moved into this store in March of 1906. The first year his business amounted to $25,000. Last year the turnover was more than $35,000, showing that the trade as far as he is concerned is in a healthy condition. He is opposed to the cutting of prices, believing that as a man grows old in business he forgets such youthful follies, and so far, while he has lost a few customers who have gone to other stores in the neighborhood because of lower prices in some lines, he has never regretted his stand in this regard. He believes in securing the best quality goods consistent with fair price, and believes also in handling only such lines as will return to him a fair living profit. Of course as he admits himself, it is not always policy to do this.

He believes in early closing. On ordinary nights if you happen to pass his place after seven o'clock at night you will always find the store closed up. He doesn't feel that he is losing much. On Friday evening, however, he stays on a little later to dress up his window for Saturday.

He always has a nice fresh supply of green goods when they are in season, and believes this side line is necessary and that it also induces a great many sales of other lines of goods.

A Store That Was Built to Order.

Newfoundland Business Criticised

Firm in Placentia in Old Colony Ask for Investigation of Their Methods of Transacting Business and Report on Standing—The Detailed Reply — All Expenses Not Given—Rent Should be Charged Whether Building Owned or Not —Should Include Interest on Capital Account—Equally Curious.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

BELOW there is given the statement of a Newfoundland firm and the requested criticism of Henry Johnson, Jr. The whole proves an interesting article.

Henry Johnson, Jr.—

Dear Sir,—Seeing your last article in "Grocer" of Feb. 24, and finding same very interesting, we would like you to criticise our doings and let us know if we are above or below the average, or if we could do better under same circumstances. We have about 1,500 people and 17 stores here. Our business in 1907 was $13,220.98; 1908 was $16,381.47; 1909 was $20,551.12; 1910 was $22,-717.02.

Two Brothers.

We are only two brothers in the business, as our senior member sold his interest to us for $320 per year while he lives. Our expenses for 1910 were as follows:

Advertising	$ 200.00
Charity	14.87
Jr. member	860.54
Interest	233.79
Sr. Members	250.00
Labor	3.31
Kerosene Oil	13.72
Paper and Twine	42.97
Managing member	1,009.93
Repairs	21.73
Postage Stamps	56.84
Stationery	25.14
Wants—such as lamp chimneys, wicks, coal buckets, etc.	110.91
Wages to 3 employes	284.50
Coal	17.59
Gas mantles	9.57
Telegrams	16.10
Life insurance an our two lives.	233.75
Traveling expenses	44.82
Gasoline for light	41.21
Bonus to employes	40.00
Present to sister	20.00
Water tax	11.40
Ground rent on a piece of land	8.00
Magazine	2.00
	$3,581.59
National Cash Register	320.00
Computing Scales	205.00
McKaskey account register	320.00
Motor boat for freight	450.00
	$4,876.59

Includes Wages.

You will see this amount includes our own wages and we own the land and buildings ourselves and do not pay any rent. There is $1,295 for the last four items that will not have to be bought any more.

After paying the first expenses of $3,581.59 we cleared $2,735.00 net profit. We get from 25 to 50 per cent. on everything except flour, pork, molasses and lumber. We think our expenses are too high but don't see where we can cut them down as you will note. We don't think this life insurance should be in the expenses, but still we must put it somewhere as it has to be paid before there will be any net profit left.

Good Net Profits.

Any information you would give us would be appreciated, and if you wish to criticise it in The Grocer do so as an outpost. Please do no mention the town.

We think our showing of $2,735 very good net profit. Certainly this includes the scales and registers and motor, still leaving a balance of $1,440. Besides this store we also have a branch store connected by telephone which does a business of $2,000 per year, in charge of a girl at $12 per month, but the profit of that store is included in the $2,735, but the expenses are not in our list of expenses shown here.

Trusting to hear from you in the near future, we remain,

BLANK BROS.

Placentia, Newfoundland, April 6, 1911.

The Answer.

This is an interesting statement in that it gives us conditions in a new country where population is scattered, distances are great, supplies of all kinds necessarily difficult to get, the variety limited mostly to staple articles, and competition so moderate that margins are yet wide. The statement is not complete for the reason that the expenses of the branch are not given, though I am inclined to think those are probably very moderate, and for the further reason that rent is not charged as an item of expense, as it should be notwithstanding the ownership of the premises.

Charge Annual Proportion.

Of the investment in permanent appliances, the registers, scales and boat, only an annual proportion should be charged off. That proportion, in the case of all but the boat, should be 10 per cent., but seeing no depreciation on other appliances is taken into account, I figure all of it at 20 per cent., which would be right for the boat in any event. Thus we have the stated expense account of $3,581.59 plus depreciation of $259, or a total of $3,740.59, which yields the ratio of somewhat under 16.44 p.c. on sales, and we have the net profit of $2,476, which shows a little over 10.9 p.c. net on sales. Certainly a gross profit, or margin, of 27.34 p.c. looks like good business to us, who are in the more populous regions where a gross margin of 18 p.c. to 20 p.c. is considered about the limit of possible accomplishment.

Interest on Invested Capital.

There is another item of expense which should be included, the interest on invested capital, according to my way of figuring; but that is a matter I should like opinions on as some have differed with me on this question. For instance, one merchant whom I know very well makes approximately 24 p.c. on his capital annually, after having charged into his expense account 6 p.c. for interest. One well informed trade paper friend of mine insists that this merchant should not charge up any interest, since his investment actually is in his business and not elsewhere, and that, consequently, he does not make 6 p.c. and 24 p.c., but really shows a net annual profit on his capital of 30 per cent. Of course, that is really as broad as it is long, but I should like to know whether others agree with me or not—and if not, why.

Close Family Business.

This is a very close family business and therefore the method of charging up the expenditures is not very important. The chief aim in such cases should be to get it all in, and that is what these brothers are evidently doing. Properly, of course, each should be charged personally with all he draws out of the business and out of his drawings he should pay his own life insurance and other personal expenses; but it is really immaterial and works out just as well the way they are doing it.

Out of Personal Resources.

I should be much interested in learning how they regulate things between themselves; that is to say, on what basis the managing member drew $1,-009.93 in the same time that the other drew $860.54; because they must have some system and I should like to know about it. I should also be very much interested, and I am sure it would interest others, to know on what basis the bonus is computed and paid to employes. The present to the sister, by the way, is another item which should have been contributed out of the personal resources of each of the brothers.

General Delivery in City of St. Thomas

How Collective System Came to be Tried Out in Railroad City, and How it Has Apparently Justified Its Existence Already—Dealer Tells of Heartburnings of Old Individual Method and the Money the New Scheme Saves Him—Sold Horses and Wagons—How it Works.

While co-operative and other systems of centralized delivery have been operated successfully in many towns in Canada it has generally been argued by those who favor the individual method that only in small places would the scheme work out to advantage.

In this connection it may be interesting to note that several merchants of the city of St. Thomas have taken up the idea and that it seems to be working out to excellent advantage to all concerned there. In this case the delivery is not co-operation, but is a simple business-like arrangement between one man and grocers and butchers and other merchants of the place. It has only been in operation for a little more than a month, but the saving has been so substantial that one or two of the men concerned have sold their delivery outfits and have definitely committed themselves to the new venture.

The system now being tested in St. Thomas has already been tried in four or five other towns in Ontario. It had never been attempted in any place larger than three or four thousand population, because as has already been noted, city dealers generally deem the idea only possible of working out in small places.

How It Started.

In St. Thomas it had its beginning about the 1st of April. Shortly before that the man who has the system visited the city and called on several merchants to test the feeling in regard to his proposition. One or two listened favorably to him and a meeting was called to further deal with the matter. Unwittingly they selected the night upon which the Hydro Electric project was being celebrated, and accordingly but very few of the dealers turned out to the delivery meeting. The man with the idea was not daunted by this, and a few days later he did succeed in getting a number of the men together. One or two of the big dealers in the town decided to give his system a trial, and so he came to St. Thomas.

Eight Wagons Going.

By the time the scheme had been in operation for two weeks eight rigs were in commission. These are of uniform appearance and the drivers are all men and the outfits look well on the street. Deliveries are made at nine and eleven in the morning, and at two and five in the afternoon. On Saturday nights there is one delivery extra. John Butler, of Butler Bros., discussing the question with The Grocer after the innovation had been fairly launched, expressed himself as highly pleased with the venture. He said :

"I wouldn't go back to the other system now unless I had to, because this new scheme saves me money every week. It costs me, maintaining two rigs, about $35 a week, or probably a little more than that, for my delivery. Under this new contract I have all my sending done for just half that amount. And the saving in money is not the only advantage.

How It Works Out.

"In the old days it used to worry me considerably when I would go home late on Saturday night or probably early on Sunday morning, when I thought of the horses. I never knew whether they would be fed or not, and owing to the conditions under which the boys were working I could hardly feel it in my heart to blame them, if they did overlook some little part of the care of the animals. Coming in at midnight after a long and wearysome day's work, they never felt much like turning in to fix up the delivery horse before going home, because even as it was they seldom got home before one o'clock on Sunday morning.

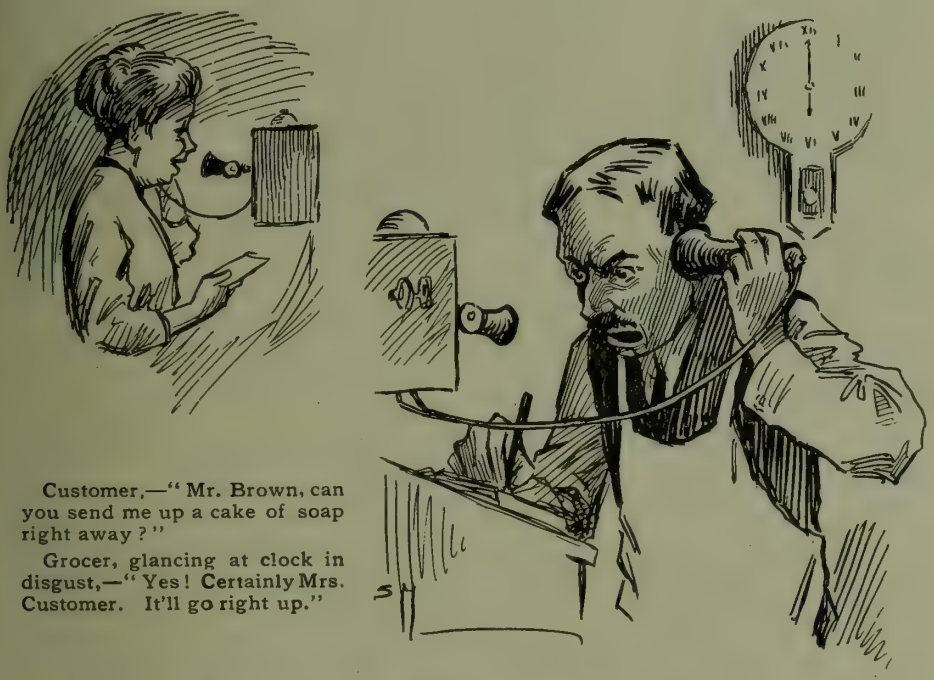
"The result of this was that usually I would waste a considerable part of Sunday either worrying about the horse or visiting the stable, to see that they had been attended to. Now all of that is past, and I can go home on Saturday night without a vestige of worry of any kind. That is in itself a considerable item, and must be taken into the estimates when one talks of the saving of the central delivery system. But there are other things."

That Pesky Little Order.

"In the days of individual delivery it was not an uncommon thing to have a woman come into the store just about closing time and order some paltry little article or two and insist on having the parcel sent up to the house at once. If we wanted that woman's trade we had to oblige her in that particular and often the delivery boy and the horse and wagon would have to make a special trip out to the outskirts of the city with a can of sardines or something equally insignificant. No dealer ever stops long enough to estimate how much it costs really to deliver an item of that kind and how much energy it takes out of both proprietor and delivery boy to effect it. All of that is past.

Women Fell in Line.

"When we started this system we sent out circulars to all our customers informing them of the hours of delivery and the time it would be necessary to order goods, if they would have them go on any special run. There are no more of the one item trips. Just as soon as the women found they could not expect their stuff at unearthly hours any longer, they rapidly fell into line and are now ordering so that all the work is cleared out by the time the last delivery in the afternoon.



"That means that when the clerk knocks off work at the end of the day there is no order left unfilled, and no customer to cause him worry in the hours of his rest. We can all go home now feeling that nothing has been left and that no customer can come in the next day to cause trouble over the non-delivery of her goods.

The Delivery System.

"The way the centralization is worked out is simple but it is effective. Supposing for instance that there are five of us grocers under contract for the system. Nine o'clock can be set for illustration purposes as the hour of first delivery. On our floor the clerks have arranged the goods going to the east, west, north and south, in separate piles. Four rigs drive along to the door, the goods are packed in the wagons going each respective direction, and at 9.20 a start is made from the store. Within half an hour of that time again every customer affected by that delivery will have received her goods. If it is not at her house, say before 10 o'clock she will know automatically that her order was not placed, in time to go out on that run, and that she may expect it on the next one. It is surprising the way all our customers are meeting us in this regard. They have adopted the spirit of the organization and now give us plenty of time to get the stuff to them in daylight.

Probable Expansion.

"At the present time there are but eight rigs in the service which will mean that probably from fifteen to twenty men and boys are employed by the concern. The presiding head, however, says that he hopes to have fifteen outfits working in this city before summer time. I believe that he will. I know for a fact that there are several men in town who are balancing the question in their minds even now as to whether or not they should change from the individual to the collective delivery. Then again there are some who are dependent on delivery stables for their horses, and accordingly are loth to give up the one system until the other had demonstrat- its usefulness. I don't think there will be any difficulty about that. When the butchers can come in and secure a service to suit their needs, surely any other dealer can be satisfied. If there is any really urgent delivery to be done we send a boy out on a bicycle, but that is only done in exceptional cases.

Customer,—" Mr. Brown, can you send me up a cake of soap right away ? "

The Bane of Individual Delivery

How Contract is Figured.

"Under his present method of contracting the delivery chief takes into consideration the number of rigs the grocer or dealer has in his individual service. He considers the amount of work done and sets a value upon it. The price is put down in the contract as a fixed thing, and there is never any trouble about it. Occasionally he will make a mistake and will strike one man's average too low or maybe a little too high, but those things work out in a codple of weeks' time. I have heard that he considered one or two of the dealers in St. Thomas were getting too much service for the money they are paid, but that will be regulated soon if he demands it, and I don't think there will be any trouble.

"In my opinion this central delivery is the one and only system for this city. It has come to stay as far as I am concerned, for I have already sold my two delivery horses and outfits as well. No more for me the worries over broken harness, broken rigs, forgotten orders, shoeing expenses and all the other troublesome incidentals, going in to make up an individual delivery system. There were some doubters at the outset who thought the people would never be satisfied with anything short of an individual care for each, but this has been clearly shown. The women of St. Thomas, as in every other place in which this system has been tried, have risen to the occasion and have changed their own day around to meet the requirements of the new delivery. As time goes on this can only be improved upon. Personally I anticipate no trouble, but only further release from care in the extension of the scope of this scheme.

ARTIFICIAL RIPENING OF FRUIT.

The Federal Food and Drug Board of the United States has decided that artificial ripening of fruit is an illegal process. It changes nothing but the appearance, the board contends, the fruit actually remaining as green and immature as before. Fruits, such as bananas, oranges, tomatoes and many others which are necessarily picked green because in no other way could they be fit to sell at the end of the journey, will, if the new ruling is observed, have to be picked ripe.

By Cleanliness All Business is Measured To-day

A young man was delivering bread. As he was about to enter a house, another man came out of it. "Take this in," the driver called, and threw the loaf up the steps to the other fellow. The latter, however, missed the loaf, which bounded, back down the steps and was ultimately taken in the house by the driver.

It hardly seems possible that in the present day of merchandising that such uncleanly methods are employed in the handling of foodstuffs. However cases still spring up to notice as bad or worse than this. The day is fast passing away though and merchants are fast realizing the fact that cleanliness is absolutely necessary in the handling of food. The dealer who wishes a continuance of trade must give particular attention to cleanliness in connection with the handling of food. Displays and everything connected with them should be suggestive of cleanliness. The grocer should see that counters, show cases, knives, plates, scoops and scales present an appearance that will induce customers to buy instead of turning them away.

SELLING AT COST.

An Advertising Phrase Which Public Have Outgrown.

"A grocer who advertises his goods as selling at cost, is either foolish or untruthful," said a merchant recently.

This is true, to a large extent. The people have outgrown that phrase. They know that no man can sell goods at cost without some reason if he expects to continue in business. Yet many grocers still cling to this phrase in advertising and in so doing destroy the confidence that people would otherwise place in them. Knowing that every dealer must have a profit on his goods, this leads the reader to think that he is trying to make believe he is selling at cost when he really is not. Or if he is really selling at cost, there must be something wrong with the goods or he would not do so.

However, this does not mean that when a grocer advertises "at cost" that either of the above are true. There may be cases when a merchant might sell at cost, as for instance when he has a large stock of any line he wishes to get rid of, or when he is making a drawing card of any one line. But of course the true reason should be given to customers in such cases that they may not form a wrong opinion.

Automobile Twice as Fast as a Horse

Two Toronto Dealers Discuss Relative Merits of Horse and Motor Deliveries—One Considers Auto Replaces Two Horses and Does Better Work at Reduced Cost—Hard Tire Type — Promptness in Delivery That Counts.

WHILE the merits of automobile delivery are still debated among retail merchants and the change from the horse is not general in Canada, more merchants are giving this method of delivering study, while others are making actual trials.

To the grocer to whom the outcome of this enterprise is uncertain, the first cost seems a big item, and for another thing they are not as familar with the expense of running an automobile as they are with horse delivery.

J. Ingham, Jr., retail butcher, 5 Market St., Toronto, is highly pleased with the principle of automobile delivery. Mr. Ingham has used a car in this work for a year and expresses himself well satisfied with results. In speaking of it he said : "I would say most decidedly that my car will and does do as much work as could be done by two horses, and besides gives a much prompter service.

Saving of the Automobile.

"For the two horses that I consider this automobile takes the place of, it cost formerly $7 per week for their feed, harness, etc., and I had to have two men for delivering to whom I paid $10 per week. To the driver of my automobile, which cost me $1,000, I pay $13.50 per week.

"The upkeep of my machine costs me a fraction less than $1.25 per day. This amount includes repairs, gasoline, oil and the keeping of my machine at a garage. The amount expended varies a great deal each month, but on the average, it has cost me during the past year about $1.25 per day."

Mr. Ingham's car is of the hard tire type. He has operated it for a year and has just now had to purchase the first new pair of tires which cost $10 a pair. The gasoline and oil for a good long day's run does not cost more than 60 cents. A comparison of costs between this system and the one formerly in use as given by Mr. Ingham, are :

Original Cost.

2 horses and waggons at $350	$ 700
1 automobile	1,000
Maintenance, wagons, per week—
2 delivery men @ $10	$20.00
2 horses keep @ $3.50	7.00
	$27.00
Maintenance, auto, per week—
1 delivery man	$13.50
Repairs, gasoline, etc.	7.50
	$21.00

"I believe," he said, "that for any moderate sized business that it is the best plan, A great many look at the first cost. I did the same, but after a little study I decided to take a chance and I am well satisfied. For one thing, it is always ready for use. It is always ready to take care of an extra rush of business for which formerly I found it necessary to keep an extra horse. And when it is not in use, it is not costing anything for maintenance."

Advertises the Business.

"It also advertises a dealer's business by showing people that you are up to date and are trying to give them prompt service. Since I installed the auto delivery my order trade has doubled and while I do not say that all this increase is due to that, I may say that a large part is due to the advertising done by it and the better service which I am able to give patrons by its use.

"Last Saturday was an extra heavy day, but I was able to take care of all the business with the car and on that day I am sure it did as much as three men and three horses could have done. All the orders were out on time, while if I had been delivering by horse I would not have been able to handle all the business."

Goes All Over the City.

"I deliver all over the city and in all quantities and have to make frequent stops and I find it covers the ground much quicker than a horse. Service is the thing that counts in business and quick delivery is one of it's important parts. If you disappoint a customer by late delivery, your business is certainly affected.

"What is most important in automobile delivery is to have a reliable driver, one who will look after the car properly and also do the delivering right. I believe if a man decides on using a car that it would be much better to selct a man on whom he can depend and to give him an education on how to drive and look after the car, before starting him to work."

A Fish Dealer.

Gallaher & Co., retail fish and fruit dealers, King St., Toronto, is another firm that has been using the automobile and well pleased with results. They now have two cars in operation. They purchased their first two years ago and after a year's trial, they were so well satisfied with results that they purchased a second. They formerly had six horses delivering, but now they have only one which they use for delivery in the immediate district. They figure that the cost of repairs, gasoline, etc., for each machine costs $25 per month. They have their own garage. The same drivers manage the cars that formerly drove the wagons. Their cars cost $1,300 each.

A Comparison.

Here is how it looks in dollars and cents :

Original Cost.

5 horses and wagons, $350	$1,750
2 cars at $1,300	2,600
Maintenance, wagons—week—
5 drivers at $10.00	$50.00
5 horses keep at $3.50	17.50
	$67.50
Maintenance, automobile—week—
2 drivers at $10	$20.00
Repairs, gasoline, etc., 2 cars	12.00
	$32.00

Per Year.

Wagon delivery, $3,510 ; auto delivery, $1,664. Difference, $1,846.

What They Say.

In speaking of it they say : "It is the promptness in delivery that counts and the accommodation which it affords customers. It can go twice the distance in the same time as a horse. If an order is waiting, you can send it right out, and what does it mean ? Nothing but a little gasoline. With a horse you are always waiting, so as to take all at once and save the house, so that delivery is not as satisfactory."

When asked in regard to its use as an advertising medium, they said : "It is an advertisement in the fact that it gives prompt delivery. That is as good an advertisement as any store can ask for."

JUST REMEMBER.

Nothing is cheap enough to be wasted.

An advertising bluff is called quicker than any other.

When business rushes past the door,
The show card turns it to your store.

A first class sign on the outside of your store is a good advertisement. If you have not one now, see to it at once.

Treat the new boy as if you expected him to make good and stay with you indefinitely, rather than as if he might get bounced any minute.

First Move on the Order Route

Experiences of The Young Clerk Who Was Given an Opportunity to Make Good on the Route—His Failure and Seeking After the Reason—The Second Chance and Ultimate Success —The Possibilities.

By The One Who Did It.

THE man on the order route must not be merely an order taker. He must be a person with all the positive qualities of salesmanship if he intends to make a success. The salesman behind the counter has the goods there which he may show customers to help back up his selling arguments but with the man who is taking orders from house to house, it is different.

I remember my first day on the order route. That day I was merely an order taker and a very poor one at that. I had been delivering for a short time and one day owing to the illness of a man on one route, I was sent out to take orders in his place. If they had sent a dummy around with a card soliciting their orders, it could not have been worse. I remember that at each house that morning when the door opened, I was there with my parrot-like rhyme: "I am taking orders for Jones. Do you want anything this morning?"

It was Monday and the housewives were busy at the week's washing and it was much easier for them to say: "No, I don't think there is anything to-day," than stop from their work to search the pantry.

To Pick Potatoes.

Those few words turned me down as much as if they had pitched me bodily out of the house. Sometimes, a customer perhaps through pity would give me a little order but my morning's work did not amount to much. The boss was not at all pleased with the results of my work and plainly gave me a hint to that effect and sent me down cellar that afternoon to pick over potatoes, work which generally was given to the youngest delivery boy to do.

As I proceeded with this unpleasant work I began to think over the day's happenings. Since I had started in the store, my thoughts had always been of the time when I would be promoted to order-taking with the more genial work and better salary connected with it, and here when I had a chance to prove my worth in that position, I had failed and badly too. Instead of going up a step, I had dropped back for I had been sent to do the junior's work.

I did some real hard thinking that afternoon and analyzed the reason for my failure pretty closely. I decided that in order to make a success of order taking, I must change my methods.

I realized for one thing that I had been too easily turned away by leaving when the customer said: "I don't think there is anything to-day." I saw that was the point where I should come in with some suggestion in order to make sales.

I saw also that I must understand the goods and know how to talk about them, so I began to learn as much as possible about them, listened to the clerks making sales and secured a grocery trade paper from the boss in order to secure pointers.

The next time I was given a chance to take orders, I was fully prepared and the boss was greatly pleased with my work.

Work Up Confidence.

There are certain lines along which the order taker must proceed in order to succeed. He must work up a feeling of confidence among his customers, so that when he recommends an article, they will have faith in him. He should see that the orders are carefully looked after and that they are served just as well as if they came to the store themselves. Unless this is done a continuance of trade cannot be expected.

Suggestion is a mighty important thing in taking orders. It is quite often the case that the housewife cannot think of things she really needs and the clerk should bring these before her.

Of course naming everything in the store over in a sing song manner is of little use. It gets but little business and is hard on the customer's nerves. They will dread your next visit while you want to make such an impression that they will be glad to see you each time.

Take one thing at a time and even if the customer did not intend to order it. you may present it to her in such a manner as to make a sale.

For instance, you may name over a long list in which dried peaches is included and she might not buy but chances are she would be more apt to if you said: "What about dried peaches? We opened up another box this morning and they are excellent stock. They are not dear either at 13 cents and make a good dessert fruit."

Name the Small Items.

Often a customer will be in need of some little article which she does not think of importance enough to order by itself. These are good things to start an order on. Say, "Now we are coming up this way, and if there is anything at all which you want, we can bring it up. Any of the smaller items such as salt, pepper, spices, soda or baking powder." Often there are some of these smaller things she requires which may lead to larger orders.

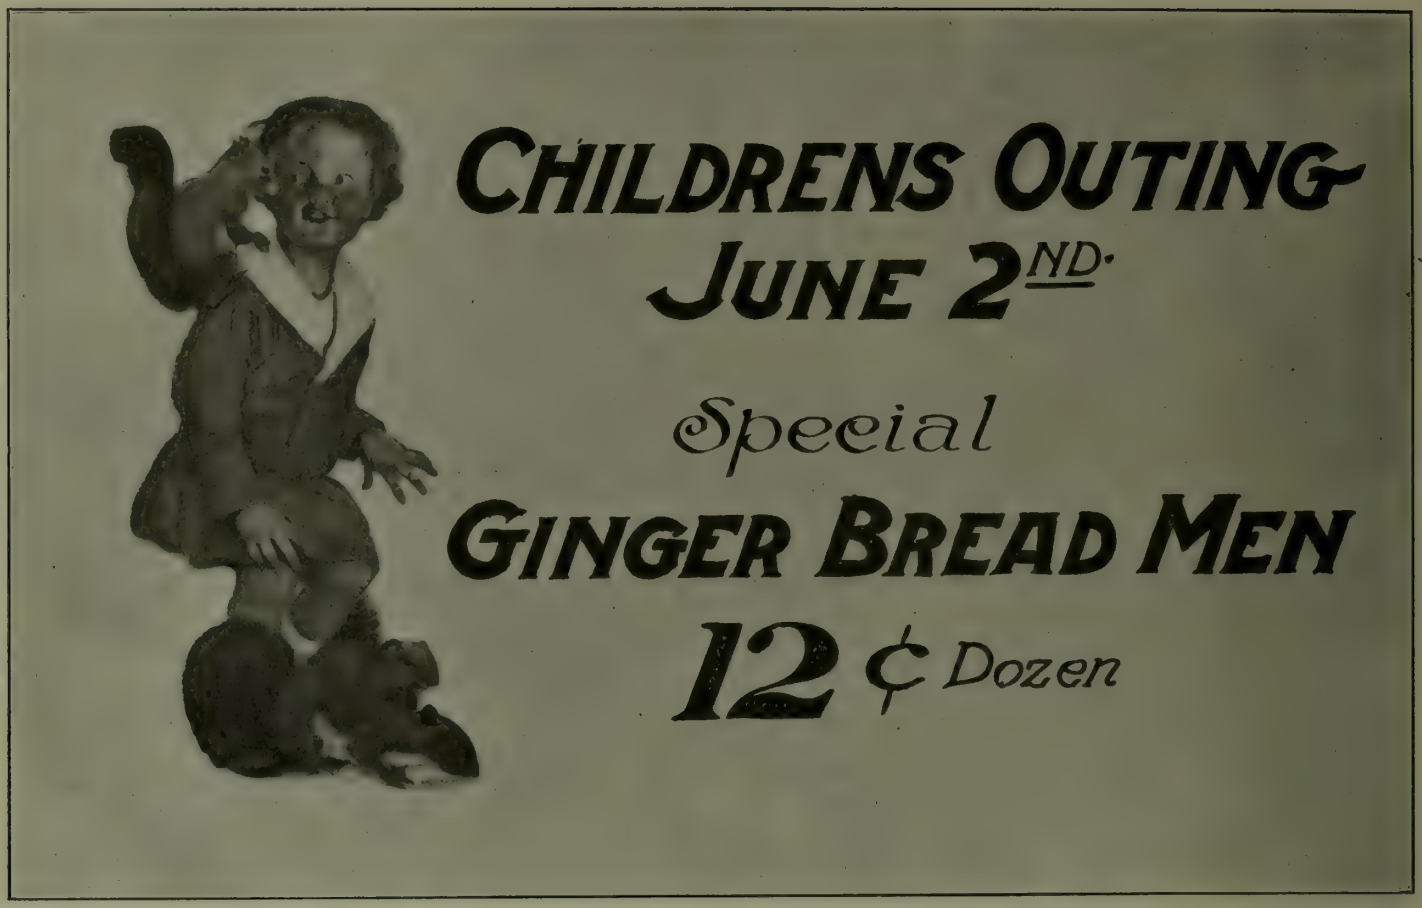
Some specialty is also a good thing to start an order on. Some order clerks have something special each week to interest customers. It is generally some line which customers do not buy every day and which if brought to their notice they will buy. These are often leaders for a good sized order.

ILLUMINED WINDOWS.

How Merchant May Take Advantage of Warmer Weather.

The warmer weather now approaching will induce people to frequent the streets more. They will also be more tempted to stop to view a window display and this therefore gives the merchant a cue by which he may increase sales, for at this time of the year it will be greatly to his advantage to see that the window is kept neatly arranged.

Another fact of importance is that the people use the streets more in the evening and have more time to stop to view a window that presents an attractive appearance. The merchant should therefore see that his window is well lighted that the display may show up to the best advantage. The poorly lighted window will receive no attention at all, while the well-lighted one will attract the gaze of nearly everyone passing.



Light is a good advertisement and money invested in it gives good returns. The merchant would do well to make a study of his window and consider if it is illumined well enough to attract attention. If it is not he should not stop at a little expense to put it in proper shape.

MILLIONS OF BANANAS.

Forty million bunches of bananas were imported into the United States in 1910. The United States is the world's largest importer of bananas. The United Kingdom comes next, her imports in 1909 being 6¼ million bunches.

OUTPUT OF BEET SUGAR.

The output of beet sugar in Canada during last year was 8,874 tons. The area planted in sugar beets was 9,350 acres producing 67,373 tons of beets.

Advantage of Show Card Publicity

Card Writer Explains Some of the Possibilities of the Show Card—Considers It of Undoubted Value in the Selling Scheme of Any Good Store—The Method to Adopt in Writing—How to Mix the Paint and Prepare Brush for Action.

By J. L. Wyckoff, London, Ont.

DO you take advantage of the special occasions to increase your sales ?

Of course every merchant makes preparations for extra business at Christmas and Easter ; some more and some less ; but how about St. Patrick's Day, St. Valentine's Day, twenty-fourth of May ; when there is a special opera or circus coming to town or the many other special occasions which occur from time to time in the course of the year ? All these special occasions mean extra business to the merchant if properly handled and provided for.

Cards Not Expensive.

The most inexpensive method of advertising these specials is by using your show windows and neatly written showcards, and if the card is illustrated by a picture which is appropriate to the special time and to the wording of the card it will double its value, and the extra sales will well repay for the time and trouble spent on that card.

Not only do your sales increase at the time but you are insuring your future business, people will get interested in your store and will be wondering what new "stunt" you will be doing next.

Pleasing Children.

Perhaps some time before mid-summer the school children of your town will have a picnic. Then get up something that will appeal especially to the children. Perhaps it might be a box of candy, a box of biscuits, or a small basket of fruit. Trim your window with these goods and have a card announcing the special placed conspicuously in your window. If you use newspaper advertising then so much the better, use your space to advertise your special. But there is one thing not to overlook—have good cards. Something neat, that can be easily read at a glance ; if you have never tried this scheme try it the next time there is anything out of the ordinary happening in town. It is worth while.

Like Extra Salesman.

A show card system in your store will bring just as good results as an extra salesman. It will sell more goods, and will appeal to every one, especially if the price is on the card. This is important as people are mostly interested in prices.

Cards could be placed about the store calling attention to seasonable goods. There is always something seasonable in the grocery store. One season follows closely another so closely that new goods are always coming in to keep the public interested. The judicious use of show cards about the store would suggest the goods in such a dignified manner that many an extra sale would be made.

Change Often.

The cards should not be used long at a time. Change them every few days, otherwise they will get stale and lose their value. It is just the same with your window display ; if not changed often it soon becomes part of the landscape. People no longer see it and it takes up valuable space which otherwise might have been profitable.

After the long winter and months of feeding on canned vegetables and preserved fruits, the human system craves for fresh and green vegetables and fruits, and in the spring when the sun comes out and all nature takes a new grip on life, then is the time to make a special showing of green vegetables and fresh fruits.

Spring Longings.

There is no other season in the year when a window display of green goods could be used to better advantage; people are longing for something green and fresh. A carefully and artistically arranged green-goods window will attract a great deal of attention, and that is where the show card could be used to increase your sales. Small cards could be fastened to each pile of vegetables, and read something like this: "Crisp Butter Beans," — Tender Lettuce,"— "Crisp Cucumbers,"—"Celery Without Strings," or other snappy phrases. Combined with the price and an artistic display this will make a combination that for quick sales will be hard to beat. Who could pass the card "Crisp Cucumbers?" You can fairly taste them and feel them crunching between your teeth.

Writing Not Difficult.

Show card writing is not as difficult as it appears, and with a little practice and the proper tools anyone can make fairly good cards.

The best brushes to use are red sable riggers in sizes 5-9 and 12. These can be brought to either a flat edge or a point, just as the worker's needs demand.

There are a number of good brands of show card paint, ready to use, now being manufactured and sold at a small cost. A few years ago it was almost impossible to get a ready-mixed show-card paint that would flow evenly and freely from the brush.

How to Mix.

Then it was necessary to mix it yourself. This is done by taking a small quantity of dry color on a saucer or palette, add a few drops of alcohol and grind thoroughly with a palette knife, a small quantity of mucilage, and add water until it is about the same consistency as thin cream.

I always mix my own paint and find it more satisfactory than any of the ready-to-use kind, except the white, which is excellent.

Assortment of Pens.

An assortment of soennecken pens are a necessity to every card-writer's outfit. Small cards can be written very rapidly with these pens. In fact, with a little practice, you will soon become so expert with the use of these pens that it is almost as easy to dash off a card as it is to write with an ordinary pen.

Good Example of Price Card.

The Writing.

The mere dipping of the brush in the color is not all that is required before applying to the card.

To thoroughly charge a brush, after dipping in the color, work brush back and forth on a palette or piece of glass, turning to right and left several times, after which draw it gently toward you on one side, the side now resting on the palette to be applied to the card.

This may seem to be a long tedious piece of work, but after a few trials, it can be done very rapidly. Keep the brush well charged and use gentle pressure an the point and you will be surprised with the ease and rapidity with which you can work.

BRINGING RETURN TRADE.

Disaster Follows Price-Slashing of the Bargain Lot Buyer.

Low prices do not attract customers for long if the quality is lacking. This statement has been proven many times.

A store was recently opened in a small town with a great flourish of advertising and setting of very low prices. There was at once a big rush of business while the other stores showed a big decrease. The merchants who knew by the prices quoted that the goods must be of low quality, wondered how long that condition would hold.

The new store was bound not to stand long because the goods carried were in most cases of inferior quality. The proprietor was strong on buying bargain lots, old stocks or anything that would allow him to slash prices. The result was that a customer would come in, buy a quantity of goods but would find before they were used that they were of poor quality and would go back to the old store, where only the best was served, for the next lot, leaving the new bargain store strictiy alone. It is generally found that most people, while they wish to purchase as cheaply as possible, would rather pay a little more and get the best grades. It is well for every merchant to think over this matter and consider if he is selling the quality of goods in all lines that will bring returned trade.

A Card That Sold Coffee.

What Others are Doing With Confectionery

Outline of Methods by Merchants in Different Parts of the Country Who Have Made of This Department a Paying Investment—The Ottawa Man's Ideas—Bracebridge Dealer Considers Display as of Paramount Importance—Prince Edward Island Sales.

SOME time ago The Grocer wrote to several merchants requesting that they forward their views in connection with the handling of confectionery in the grocery store. The response has been generous, and the ideas presented below will no doubt be of assistance to dealers in all parts of the country, who are hesitating whether to take up the line or leave it distinctly alone.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—"I do not make confectionery a side line in my store," writes an Ottawa grocer. "I make it a regular line, and depend on it to make up for the small profit I receive on many lines of staples. In many towns the grocers have allowed the druggist to capture all the candy trade. I do not think it should be. Managed properly confectionery is a line which gives a good profit in itself and besides when taken full value of, it also attracts othertrade."

Profits Good.

"That confectionery when properly looked after returns a good profit is allowed by most merchants. If the grocer received an equal rate of profit on sugar and soap as he does on candy, he would soon be on easy street. Therefore, instead of giving his time to selling his customers sugar at a starvation profit, if the grocer would expend the same amount of energy on the promotion of candy sales, the profit on the balance sheet at the end of the year would total up to a much more pleasing amount."

"Display is one of the necessaries for the sale of confectionery. Placed under the counter or in the drawers, business is not liable to be brisk, but attractively displayed as they can easily be, results should be good. Many people visit your store daily and most people have an appetite for sweets. You have seen a display of candy that fairly made your mouth water. That is the way you want to show your goods, so that they fairly force the person to buy."

Ottawa. S.

Bracebridge View.

Kirk Bros., Bracebridge, Ont., is another firm that has given special attention to the sale of candy. They are well pleased with the results.

"In reference to the confectionery department of our store," they write, "we find it just as profitable as the average good grocery turnover. The bulk goods in high-grade chocolates realize for us a nice profit, while the package goods have a tendency to reduce that by the inactivity of some of the lines."

"For displaying the best quality of confectionery we have provided large silent salesmen, while the candies that retail from twenty to thirty cents per pound will be found in shelves with glass fronts. For this purpose we choose the lowest shelves and get strips of glass. Plate glass is preferable as it is much the strongest. The glass is cut about six inches wide and fitted so that each piece may be taken out separately and cleaned. The confections are poured into the shelves which make an attractive display, while the goods are in view of the customers until the last pound is sold."

In Prince Edward Island.

"Customers called nibblers have been responsible in a measure for the slim results of the confectionery department in many country stores, as also have bad scales and uncleanly surroundings, but the above method of showing these goods has greatly facilitated this department in our store and I am sure will make good for others who adopt it."

M. & A. McLeod, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., like Kirk Bros., consider display as of paramount importance. They say:—"With regard to the confectionery department of our store, we find a silent salesman and a good counter show case about the best manner of displaying goods to promote sales and to make sure that they be clear of dust. We also keep a few good lines continually on the counter with show cards attached. We change these before customers get tired of any one line, and then come back in a few weeks to the same lines again, so that in this way customers never get tired of any one kind of goods."

Question of Management.

It is a fact that some stores do not derive a big profit from their confectionery. Bad management is generally the cause. A store was recently found where the clerk was weighing out 10 cents worth of high grade chocolates on a scale with a capacity of 160 pounds. Quite likely the candy department was a source of loss and nothing else could be expected. Correctness of weight is one of the necessities in protecting profits on candy. Especially in this line, clerks seem to be careless in weighing. The amount that is lost in overweight in some stores would be a fair profit in itself.

The scales should be the most exact that can be purchased, as in high grade chocolates, a little overweight each time amounts to a great deal.

Loss in Weight.

Suppose that in selling 40-cent chocolates that in each ten cents worth an ounce over is given, which in itself does not look like very much. But that amounts to 40 cents per box of five pounds, and if 20 boxes were sold in a week it would mean a straight loss of $8.00.

It is wise also, to have the scales right where the candies are, for if it is a distance away, and there is a little overweight, the clerk is liable to allow it go.

In some stores sales do not amount to enough to pay for the room or the investment, as enough attention is not given to the extension of sales. Go into it lightly at first and gradually work up a trade. Be careful not to overstock, but to buy often and in small quantities and thus maintain a fresh stock. There is a difference between overstocking and carrying enough varieties to suit the fancy of your different customers.

A Montreal grocer has his biscuit and candy department together. The biscuits are placed on the shelves at the back and the candies on the counter. He has not a show case but plate glass sloping backwards with the candies piled up against it. The scales are placed at the back of the counter so that the weighing is done with the least trouble and loss.

He Knew Somebody Would Get Business

Why Montreal Dealer Announces Himself in Favor of Circular Advertising—Can Send Out Six a Year for the Cost of Newspaper Ad.—Located in District That is Rapidly Filling Up, and is Getting the Bulk of the Trade.

By H. T.

DIRECT and highly satisfactory results from circular advertising has disposed J. Herbert Swift, who with his father owns and manages Swift's Provision Stores, corner of Fairmont and Waverly streets, Montreal, to regard with favor this form of attracting the public's attention.

In addition to this the cost of his method is comparatively small, especially when considered with some forms that are generally used.

Last year, Mr. Swift, for the reason that he is a believer in advertising in general, chose a daily paper as a medium. Recalling that experience he said: "I paid $121 for a regular adversisement that I do not believe brought me $5 in actual results. I tried to make my advertisement as catchy as the space under contract would allow, but it was to no avail. Then as a business tonic I resolved to try the circular idea, and the result has been extremely pleasing."

Mr. Swift's Plan.

"I wrote out a statement," Mr. Swift explained, "of what I desired to say in my circular. I paid a little attention to the introduction, desiring to make it brief, but also appealing. Then, I selected a few articles which I was confident were worthy of a special notice, and gave a short note to each. My idea with circulars is not to make them price-cutting advertisements. You may get a few orders in this way, but the general experience seems to have been that those who take advantage of the prices that are cut buy these goods to the exclusion of the others, and it is generally the latter that you wish to sell. Talk quality in your circular rather than price, although I believe the price should be quoted with the articles."

The Cost of This Circular.

In contrast to the cost of the newspaper advertising, Mr. Swift estimated that the first circular he distributed cost him the following:

Printing of circular (3,000)	$8.00
Rubber stamp	.30
Envelopes ($2.55 per 1,000)	7.65
Distribution	2.00
Total	$17.95

Therefore, for the amount of money spent last year in newspaper advertising, Mr. Swift could send out six circulars this year, three thousand being distributed each time.

Direct Result.

Mr. Swift has already sent out two this year, and for a special reason. He is located in a district that is rapidly growing. People are moving in regularly, and it must necessarily follow that some one in the neighborhood is going to get the business. The circular method therefore is more of a tonic to the regular business, and affords a means of introducing the store to new customers. Mr. Swift can cite many cases of the results that he has secured. In the list of articles mentioned in one case, Mr. Swift referred to Green Mountain potatoes. His own customers and people he had not heard of before, called or phoned in orders for these potatoes. Others mentioned the fact that they read of these potatoes in the letter received at their door. It happened that at that time, good potatoes were scarce.

Some Peculiarities.

Another instance. On the list a line of English biscuits are given some prominence. The value of the circular was once more proved by quite a number of enquiries from Old Country people, who were glad of this opportunity to secure these English goods. A brand of print butter was another feature, and so on. The value of the circular as an advertisement is not at all questioned by Mr. Swift. He is satisfied that it is a good idea, and many of his new customers are attributed to its work.

A Striking Instance.

As an instance of what the letter really did in the way of securing new customers, Mr. Swift pointed to a long line of new houses. "There are twenty-seven families in these houses, and they have only recently moved in. I sent circulars to each house and I believe we have at least three-quarters of the trade from that group of dwellings alone."

This is an instance of the value of a good circular as a means of introducing the business and the store to prospective customers.

The Distribution.

One of the chief factors in its success lies in getting it into the household. Mr. Swift had a rubber stamp made of the words, "To the lady of the house," all in capital letters. This was stamped across the centre of a plain envelope. Another stamp was used to print in the corner, the store name and address. The envelope was not sealed but the flap was turned in. Mr. Swift felt that the residents of his community, new and old, had seen his deliveey outfits passing and repassing, and they would be attracted by the name on the envelope.

Somebody Will Get the Business.

Thrown Under Verandah.

The next step was to secure several reliable boys. They were sent around through a particular district leaving one at each house, with the understanding to get it inside if possible. The letter slots were useful and helped a great deal. The boys were instructed not to ring the door bells. As might be expected, Mr. Swift found one boy who disposed of a large number of the circulars under one verandah. That is one of the evils that must be guarded against.

He intends to continue this method of advertising, thus indicating his satisfaction with the results received. The individual grocer will probably follow his own ideas, for there is no set of rules to be remembered, but the essentials comprise a neat introduction, emphasis upon quality rather than price, and a list of articles that will be especially attractive.

Some grocers in following the circular method of advertising, send them out regularly and more frequently than Mr. Swift's plan, but they are generally aiming at a different object than was the latter.

To Make an Intermittent Flashing Sign

Simple Scheme by Which Dealer Can Get More Out of Regular Window Displays—Place of the Flashing Sign in the Business World—How This Little Grocers' Help is Made by Merchant Himself—The Painting of the Sign and Fixing of the Entire Arrangement.

By C. D. Browne.

NOW that the wonderful "white coal" from Niagara has been brought, so to speak, to the very doors of all the little dealers in all the little towns in Western Ontario, and since the development of electricity in other parts of the country has gone ahead with wonderful rapidity, retailers might well turn to this agency for help in the problem of illuminating to best advantage the displays of goods in their windows and in their stores.

In all the large cities the so-called "flashing sign" has gone on steadily increasing year by year until now the main thoroughfares of some of the larger Canadian cities vie in splendor with New York's famous Great White Way. It is strangely interesting to find one of these pieces of advertising picking out letters and emblems in fire far up in the night. But at the same time these electrical displays have a drawing power little short of marvelous, and the dealer that has gone in for this method of advertising has taken a big step in securing a hold on the imagination and pockets of the common people.

The Money That is Spent.

Hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars are represented in this industry to-day, and the total seems to be steadily increasing rather than showing signs of abating. And yet it is possible always for a merchant or manufacturer using this means of making his name known to the public to overstep the limits of prudence and launch into a scheme that will cost much more money than it will return to him in business. So while there are numerous specialists in this class of display advertising who refuse to consider anything but the largest class of business, there are also many who have made a study of obtaining the maximum of advantage from the minimum of expenditure. Clever men have been taxing their ingenuity to discover little things that will with small outlay return a good harvest in trade to the user.

In just such a manner as this one man has come out with an idea which will no doubt serve to brighten the window displays of many a retail establishment. It is quite simple and anyone at all of mechanical bent can put it into working shape with very little effort or trouble.

Briefly, the scheme consists of the assembling of a wooden box, a strong electric light, some cardboard, and sign painting skill. And in some cases the latter is hardly required, as will be shown presently. If any retailer would desire to illuminate, say a display of oranges in a window, this arrangement should prove ideal. It would multiply several times over the selling power of the window make-up.

The Requisites.

If he would do this the first requisite would be to take an old wooden box of a size sufficient for the advertising he desires to use and place it in the forefront of his window. It can easily be draped and kept out of view. The next step is to remove the lid from the box and fit it with an oak frame finished dark so that it will not be conspicuous. The next is to fit a pane of glass to this frame. It must be of the description known as ground glass so that the advertisement which is put on the back of it cannot be seen except when the light is flashed on. After this has been completed to satisfaction the next item is the writing of the advertisement. Unless the retailer is experienced in this it might be wise to call in the services of some local sign writer, at least for a time.

A good plan is to take a piece of cardboard the size of the glass, mark out the lettering on it, and cut the letters away with a sharp knife. It can be seen that when this is placed behind the glass the advertisement will show in letters of light on a dark background. Care must be taken, however, that closed up letters like "O" and "B" are cut with ties across as in stencilled lettering. If this is not done, the centres will drop out, and the whole effect of the sign spoiled.

Another Method.

Another method is to take a painted window bill which will suit the size of the frame and paste it on the back of the glass. It should first be oiled to make it thoroughly transparent. Either of these two suggestions are simple enough for any amateur to work out to satisfaction.

Now that the box has been made the only thing lacking is the light. Gas can be used, but electricity by reason of its handiness and safeness is preferable and in addition the cost of the equipment is less than is the case with gas.

Let us suppose that electricity in this case is to be used. An electric lamp of flexible wire should be suspended in the centre of the box.

Fixing the Flasher.

Let us also suppose that the advertising matter either cut out in cardboard or consisting of the window sign pasted on the back of the glass has been prepared. All that is lacking now is the automatic flashing on and off of the light. It would be generally supposed that this would be the most difficult of all. Such is not the case.

The intermittent light is produced by an automatic device known technically as a "flasher" which any good electrician can supply at small cost. The installation is simple. All that is necessary to fix this flasher in position is to cut the wire at any point (after seeing of course that the current has been switched off, bare the ends of the wire so that the metal is visible for nearly half an inch, and insert one end into each of the terminals of the flasher. The work is now finished. It may be that the automatic effect may not be obtained for a minute or two, but it is generally said that it does work to perfect satisfaction after the first few trials.

It rests with the dealer to make the box in which his light is contained any size that it is suited to his needs. It is generally to be assumed, however, that the medium-sized arrangement attracts as much attention as the larger and has a much more artistic appearance. The idea of the intermittent advertiser is to announce in letters of light the product that is being advertised. It is therefore only reasonable for the dealer to take the stand that passers-by should only be given as much to read as can be read in the flashing of the light. To make one or two flashes necessary for the complete reading of the advertisement would not be in his best interests. The fewer words used behind the glass the better.

Will Sell Goods.

The beauty of this scheme is that there seems to be no limit to its usefulness. It isn't a sign that flashes out its message persistently night in and night out, but it tells a different story every evening if the manipulator so desires. Being humble and placed in humble surroundings and lacking the peculiar background of the black wall of night, this little intermittent sign in the grocery window will not attract as much attention as will its big brother placed high at the top of some mighty skyscraper. But it will draw the gaze of people passing by, and there will be many to stop and read its message and give more than a passing glance to the display of foodstuffs behind. It supplies a touch of newness to a business considered by the public drab and commonplace, and the man who takes advantage of its power to-day is the man who will probably be considered as possessing advanced ideas in any community, small or great.

The Cost Small.

Supposing, as was said before, a merchant desired to advertise a special line of oranges. Would it not be a simple matter to pick out the word "oranges" in big letters for the centre of the glass and put the brand and the price above and below? This would comprise but four or five words at most, and could easily be read by the passer-by. So with any other line of goods. The point to be made could be set forth on the little intermittent advertiser and there is no doubt that the utilization of this would at least increase the sales of that display to a considerable extent. The cost of the power used in a night or in a week would be insignificant as power to-day is cheaper than it ever was and is steadily becoming more so as the years pass on and the radius of its use widens.

Gas Can be Used.

There are those that say that gas can be used as easily in this connection as can electricity, but it is said that the cost of the flasher is much greater when gas is the illuminating force than it is with the white coal. But it can be done. And to anyone who desired to try the experiment and either did not have or could not get electricity the lack should not hold him back from at least investigating the utility and selling power of the idea.

Sign painting to-day has become a highly cultivated art, and the amount of money that is being spent upon it yearly is little short of stupendous. Manufacturers of special lines of goods everywhere see to have become innoculated with the virus of the idea, and signs are being reared high on every hand.

Signs of the Times.

If this expenditure returns a profit to the manufacturer then the home-made apparatus of the little dealer is equally sure to return him dividends on his work and outlay. Intermittent display advertising is going to occupy a much more prominent position than even it does to-day. At least all the signs of the times point that way, and it might be well for the general retailer to at least consider how he can best take advantage of this craze that seems to have taken possession of the general public.

There probably are contrivances to-day designed to do just the same work as the home-made contrivance described here. To those who can afford the necessarsary outlay these expert-made arrangements would appeal as more desirable perhaps. But there are undoubtedly many small dealers to whom any unnecessary expense looms large. It is for these particularly that this story was written. If it should prove the success suggested it would soon make possible the purchase of a more elaborate affair.

Ways of Caring for a Growing Business

Merchant From Prince Edward Island Writes For Information—Moving on Always and Always Crowded—Intending to Put in a Meat Market—Business Half Cash, Good if Rigidly Maintained — The Butchers' Trouble — Delivery and its Anxieties—The Handling of a Cash System.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I INSERT the following letter fully as much for what I cannot do for the writer as for what I can suggest; hoping that some of my readers may feel moved to speak up with good pointers.

Henry Johnson, Jr.,—

Dear Sir:—First we wish to compliment your paper generally, which is full of good information for every grocer. We get more than our money's worth. The grocer who does not read your paper regularly does not know what he is missing.

Still Crowded.

Now we ask for a little information for our own benefit. We have been in the grocery business for the last fourteen years and have outgrown from one small room to a good sized double room, and still we are crowded. Now we are to occupy a room 50 feet front by 90 feet deep. The rent will be more than double what we have been paying, but as we are intending to put in a meat market, of which we have always felt the need, besides the new location being about the best in town, we feel safe in paying such rent. We have a good trade in groceries and feel confident that the big majority of our customers will buy their meats of us.

Half and Half.

Our business runs about half cash and half accounts from 15 to 30 days. Our credit customers are of the very best for we do not take any chances. An applicant for opening an account with us must show the cleanest record or we do not care for his trade. In going into the fresh meats business we find that we know absolutely nothing about it and we should be glad to pay anyone who knows for information in that line.

The hardest problem that we have always with us is the delivery. We find it very expensive. We advertise and that brings us trade from every corner of the city. Our city has a good population and is very scattered. It keeps us busy to give the trade good service. We run two teams and an automobile.

Interested in Soda.

What effect will the meat business have on our expense? Can we make the two lines more profitable than groceries alone? We notice talks on delicatessen, which appeal to us very much. We are also interested in soda fountains, which we know yield big profits. Can you give us the general lay-out and best way to display the most profitable goods in a store of groceries, meat market, delicatessen and soda fountain combined?

One more thing and probably the most important is, what would be the best system to handle the cash? Cashier, cash register, carriers, or some other good way to keep tab on salesmen and cashier? We wish to repeat that we should be glad to pay anyone that knows for any good information or advice. Hoping that you will favor us with an early reply, we are

Respectfully your,
SUBSCRIBER.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.

A Concise Statement.

That, I submit, is a very concise statement, covering about all a man could ask by way of general information. I am only sorry I cannot answer many of the inquiries; and I fear that, on other matters, I can only give some ideas, which are open to any amount of discussion; but here goes.

Manner of handling accounts is ideal. With such a method, where the rules are carried out strictly, the credit business is better than cash over the counter. But there must be nothing weak-kneed about it, or it will fail disastrously—and often the merchant will fail with it.

Meat Expenses High.

I cannot say anything about meats in general, never having had any experience with them; but I understand that the expense of handling meats is much greater than in the grocery line—and there are some other disadvantages which intensify the troubles of grocers. For instance: Did you ever realize that the grocer sees his customers too often? He does; or rather, his contact is too constant. Compare the dry goods merchant. He has a visit from his customer once a month, twice a month or once a week. He sells her five, or ten, or twenty dollars' worth of goods at one time, makes one delivery, and is done—that is, many times.

Delivers Too Often.

He may have and often does have kicks, come-backs, various troubles; but the point is, the contact is had so seldom that, even if there is trouble, the instances are comparatively far between and adjustment is comparatively easy; there is not the multiplicity of transactions which open the way for so many little misunderstandings and errors as will lead the customer to conclude that "there is nothing but mistakes in a deal with Smith!" And right here is the trouble, as I see it, with the meat business—that the meat man delivers literally every day; which means that whereas the grocer runs 15 or 20 chances of getting into trouble with his customer each month, the meat man runs 30 chances.

Sales Small.

The sales are uniformly small, too, which is another disadvantage; though this is not such a factor after all, for the average grocery sale is smaller, probably, than most of us think. In my own store the average sale, last time I investigated this part of it, was some thirty-three cents. Still, butchers make money, so there must be a correct way to conduct that part of the business; and undoubtedly somebody will help this correspondent with suggestions.

The delivery problem I covered last week, so far as my present experience goes. I may have occasion to change some of my ideas again later on.

Delicatessen Special.

I have had little experience with delicatessen and, personally, do not want any. If the store is so situated that many people can "run in" for such things and carry them home, well and good; but if the delivery problem is going to enter, I should hesitate This, is, of course, only another way of saying that delicatessen is a special business which, to be a success, must be handled in a special way. Same applies to the soda fountain, with which I have had no experience.

Needs a Drawing.

The general lay-out is a big proposition, the correct treatment of which would fill an entire article very easily. I cannot even barely suggest any arrangement without a drawing of the store, showing where and how the front faces; and the knowledge whether it is a corner store or not. And right here I should like to say that this matter of lay-out is of far more importance than most grocers realize. It is, in fact, the most important item with which we have to deal. On the correct arrangement depends the greatest degree of success.

Of Paramount Importance.

I have spent many months on such a problem in the past; and if I had it to do again, I should want to spend a year, arranging and re-arranging. Not only do we want display made in the right relation each part to the whole; but the matter of economy of space; the saving of work and steps; the placing of counters, cases and scales so that they will yield the maximum of service for the minimum of effort—all these things must be wrought out literally "with fear and trembling" so paramount is their importance. To make a bare outline of a good store plan is real work; but I will make it to the best of my ability for these gentlemen if they will send me the plan I ask for; and in doing it I shall be repaid through the added experience I shall get out of the work—otherwise I should feel much inclined to shirk the task.

Handling of Cash.

The handling of cash depends so much on the arrangement of the store that I shall mostly leave that for the plan to be sent me. For a store with one entrance it is not hard to place a cashier properly. If there are more entrances, the problem is complicated With a moderately large business a fine arrangement is a cashier's desk near the entrance, the desk to be equipped with a two-drawer, best make register, one drawer to be used by the regular cashier and the other drawer by her relief. The customers mostly "pay cashier" by hand as they pass out; while long distance change is made by means of a carrier with checks.

BRACEBRIDGE, ONT., SEED WINDOW.

The accompanying illustration is that of a seed window dressed by Kirk Bros., dealers in groceries, flour and feed, fruit, etc., in Bracebridge, Ont. The cut hardly does the display justice. It is always difficult to procure a photograph portraying all the little details of a window arrangement. When seeds are the constituents it is doubly difficult and almost impossible, because the little grains register on the plates all of like color. In the tower, standing out prominently in the background, all of the loopholes are filled with different kinds of grain. All this has been missed. There is still enough, however, to demonstrate that the window is an excellent example of the window-dresser's art, and that it sold seeds, as it was intended to do. The little packets in the foreground cover a multitude of varieties, and there must have been something there for everybody who would be in need of seeds. The tower, and the effect of the battlements of which it is the corner stone, would tend to attract and hold the attention of the passerby, which is necessary if the seeds and grain within are to be sold.

A Regina Dealer on Collection of Debts

Considers the Gathering of Past-Due Accounts the Most Unpleasant Duty the Merchant Has to Perform—How He Advises the Accomplishment of This—Believes in Personal Visits and in the Promissory Note.

By F. R. West.

A MERCHANT of Regina, Sask., considers the collection of accounts "About the most unpleasant duty in the business." Especially does he feel this way about those long past due.

"It is the aim of the dealer," he says, "to collect these with the smallest loss and least trouble possible. It must be done so that the customer will not be offended, or that too large an amount need be taken up in the collection.

"The trouble," he thinks, "is that bills are not rendered to customers often enough, the result being that the total soon runs up to an amount that the customer cannot conveniently pay. When an account is opened with a customer there should be an agreement as to the limit of the account and the time of payment. When the bill reaches the amount, it should without delay be presented to the customer. If a customer's account within a certain time exceeds earnings, there is going to be a struggle to get even. You are going to have some difficulty in keeping their account within a satisfactory limit.

Time to Collect.

The time to get after an account is immediately after it is past due. If it is not paid at once, start in to collect it.

"The promissory note has been found a good way to collect past due accounts. It is a liability which the debtor seems to give more attention to than a mere account. They may promise to pay the account within a certain time, but in the note you have it in writing. For the man whose salary is not large, it is some times advisable to split the account into several notes of convenient size coming due at different times. If a large note comes due and he knows he cannot pay it, he is liable to disregard it altogether, but if it is of moderate size, he will likely make an effort to meet it. In most cases it is best to place a note with the bank for collection, for the debtor seems to make a greater effort to meet his obligations with the bank than a private individual.

No Child's Play.

"The collection of each account," this merchant continues, "is a separate problem in itself. Collectian is no child's play. It requires real effort. Few accounts can be collected in exactly the same way. Each one has peculiarities of its own in regard to the amount, the time it has run and the person to be dealt with. The idea is to collect it as soon as possible with the least bad feeling so as to retain the person as a customer if possible.

"The customer should be approached tactfully at first so as not to offend, gradually making your demands on them a little stronger.

Personal Visit Best.

"At all times, a personal visit is best, no matter whether you are asking for your money for the first or the tenth time. Your letter may not be answered, but they must give you an answer when you call in person. Calling at the house will often cause a person to square up rather than let the neighbors see you come so often. Do not at first use too forcible language but convey the idea that you must have the money. Do not if possible make the person angry for then they may make you go to great difficulties to collect it.

"Suppose you find on inspecting your books, a number of accounts which are long past due. If you determine to attempt to collect these you must have some system of working. When an account has run a year or so, you need not expect to collect it on first trial and you must therefore have some follow-up system.

In Collection Book.

"Place these accounts in what is termed a collection book, allowing a page to each customer. On this page note exactly what you do to collect that customer's account. If you write asking him to let you have a payment on your account before a certain date, place the exact words in the collection book. Then you will know by referring to it, what to say in your next letter and how strong to put it.

"I have seen a collector send out a notice:—'I must ask you to settle this account for sure before March 10th.' then perhaps in a few weeks, in going over the books he would forget that he had written before and say: 'I find a balance on our books against you of $7.10. Could you let us have a settlement?' He should have made his letter stronger than the first and put: 'You neglected a remittance before March 10th as we asked. We must ask for a payment within two weeks, or we shall have to take other steps to collect.' By the book method, knowing what he said in the first letter, he would have written the second one correctly."

A Prince Edward Island merchant gives some ideas in regard to curtailing accounts. "When a customer's bill begins to exceed what you believe is a satisfactory limit, you should not try to sell them any more goods than they really require and buy without any encouragement from you. It is to the interest of the dealer to keep a customer's account within a certain limit, for if it gets to a sum they cannot handle easily, they leave you and you lose their trade and have also the bother of collecting their account."

From the other end of the Dominion, in the Province of British Columbia, a grocer writes: "When a man leaves town owing you an account, you should find out the names of his friends and neighbors from whom you can generally find out his place of residence. Sometimes it is best to get in touch with his employer and have him mention the matter to him. If a man leaves with the idea of never paying, sometimes it is best to keep drawing a little out of him at a time by threatening until it gets down to a moderate amount and then lay low until you get him in such a position that you can make him settle."

The following method as submitted by a dealer is given without endorsation or comment: "Very often when a customer owes you an account it is very difficult to get them to come to you to make any arrangement in regard to it's payment. Sometimes in order to do this, I render them the bill adding two or three dollars to it more than they really owe. This brings them to the store to protest that they do not owe that amount. I look up their account, and explain to them there has been a mistake in sending out the account. Then when I have them in the store I ask them to make some arrangement in regard to it's payment. My brother merchant may argue that it is bad to admit to a customer that you made a mistake, but a customer who will not come to see you about his account, is not liable to give this much attention."

WITH AN ILLUSTRATION.

An illustration in your advertisement is a good thing but be sure it has some practical bearing on the subject dealt with in the advertisement.

HIGH PRICED CHERRIES.

The first box of California cherries was offered on the New York market on April 28th, and sold for $100, or $10 per pound.

Result of Twenty Years' Work.

Through careful management and strict adherence to business principle, H. G. McDonald, of 223 Sorauren Ave., Toronto, has succeeded in building up a good business in one of the residential portions of the city. The accompanying photograph of the interior of his store shows clearly some of the ideas that have been introduced into the business.

Mr. MacDonald has been in business in Toronto for 20 years, eight of which have been spent in the present building. After a brief experience as a clerk, he launched into business for himself and has gradually built up his present trade. Four clerks are kept busy all the time while it requires two delivery wagons to look after that portion of the business. Orders are taken in the immediate vicinity twice a week, but at present, Mr. McDonald is giving special attention to supplying those engaged in railroad construction work at Parkdale.

But if there is anything that Mr. McDonald is strong on, it is display, which is clearly shown by a visit to his store. Two show windows, one of which borders on two streets, thus making it of special value, are used to good advantage in promoting sales. In the interior of the store, as will be seen by the photograph, goods are displayed in such a manner as to make sales.

"It pays to have nice fixtures. They certainly sell goods," says Mr. McDonald, and he has carried this belief into actual practice. Just inside the store, is a show case in which pastry is displayed, which is made a special for to attract trade. A silent salesman is used for showing box candies and two counter show cases for the display of bulk candies. Another fine salesman case gives prominence to pickles, sauces, olives, olive oil and other high-grade bottled goods. There is also a display case for toilet soaps and another for cheese, while at the rear of the store, is a display refrigerator which serves a double purpose, that of keeping goods and also of showing them so as to make sales.

The shelves are all nicely finished and Mr. McDonald believes that it pays him on account of the added attractiveness it gives to the goods. On one side there are two mirrors set into the shelves while the other side has one, as well as one in the window. Bottled goods are piled up in pyramids in front of these, which makes them show up well. On one side there is also a closed-in wall case for essences and other small bottled goods.

On one side at the back of the store, as will be seen in the photograph, Mr. McDonald has a built-up display of goods that brings many lines prominently before customers. It commences at the floor and extends some distance above the counter, allowing a variety of goods to be shown.

A specialty is made of supplying customers with the best in butter and eggs. Great care is given to the securing of fresh supplies only, and also to keeping them perfectly in the store. This is a special line which, besides the amount of trade done in it, itself, attracts other business to the store.

On the Possibility of the Telephone

How Dealer Concluded His Instrument Was not a Dividend Producer, But Decided to Take One More Chance — How He Widened the Scope of His Business and Sold Many Lines of Goods—The Methods.

VERY often we find grocers who say that the orders received over the telephone do not amount to enough to make it a paying investment. Quite often we find that these same grocers have made no efforts whatever to make it a good paying investment. They have the telephone installed and leave it to work out it's own salvation.

The telephone offers a good opening to the grocer for the extension of trade and the wise dealers will use it to good effect. A New Brunswick dealer recently said: "Like many others I believed that results from the telephone did not measure up to the amount expended and had almost decided to have it taken out when I began to realize that I had never tried to make any use of it myself, leaving it entirely to customers who might chance to think of using it. I decided to try to work up some new business by means of the instrument and so began each day to take some special article, and introduce it to customers through the 'phone. I did not confine myself to regular customers, but rang many others up, who in some cases through this method became regular customers, and often besides selling the special article which I gave prominence to each day, I succeeded in making sales of many other lines."

In many cases customers get very unsatisfactory service, through the telephone, because incompetent clerks are allowed to answer it. This work should be assigned to only the brightest clerks who will be able to give intelligent information about the goods and prices. Many a customer has decided not to use the phone, because she had difficulty in explaining what she wanted to the person in charge.

The real salesman, when a customer enters the store, does not merely hand out the articles that are asked for, but attempts to introduce other lines also to the customer. It should be the same with the telephone. The person who answers it should not merely take the customer's order, but suggest other lines to them in such a manner as to make sales.

Very often a clerk will be heard to say, "That's all, is it Mrs. Customer?" He suggests to them that that is all and they readily assent. The true salesman, however, when he has taken the given order, will say: "Now what else, Mrs. Customer? We have some fine imported tomatoes to-day at 10 cents. Would you like a few of those?" and thus continue a talk that will sell goods.

Talk Sells After Interval of Month

Traveler Relates Little Trick of Salesmanship That Led Him to Visit One Particular Store a Full Month After a Clerk There Had Obligingly Shown Him New Goods—The Value of Keeping Eternally Selling.

By Colin C. Jones.

TRAVELERS have an excellent chance to study merchandising methods and to see the reasons for success and failure among the merchants and clerks. A drummer recently told the writer that clerks who are often aroused to attempt to show better salesmanship by introducing new goods, have been discouraged at the start just because they could not see actual results. They decide to increase sales by this method, but because they do not really make sales in the first few trials become disappointed, although they may have done a great deal of good missionary work, by paving the way for future sales.

Results are Not Direct.

"Salesmen should realize the fact," continued the traveler, "that results are not always direct. The customer just at that moment may not have any use for that article, but at some future date when she needs it, she will most likely go to the store where it was shown to her. I have the same thing occur to me in my own work. If I did not attempt to sell more goods than the customer asked for, my sales would fall very flat. I am constantly at work trying to introduce articles which they do not ask for or which they have never sold. Sometimes I sell at the time. Sometimes several trips afterwards, the customer will ask me about that article and I know that my work has not been in vain, although at the time I might have thought that I had wasted my time."

Good Salesmanship.

"Yes," echoed another traveler, "I had an example myself not long ago which showed that results do not always come direct. It was over two month's ago that I was in a store with a friend who was making a purchase, when a bright looking young clerk who will no doubt some day be a leader of salesmen, stepped up to me and said: 'I would like to show you a range of hats which we have just received.' Although I replied that I was not in need of any he passed it off lightly with: 'Oh, that doesn't make any difference. I just want to show them to you,' and soon he had me at the hat display where he selected a particular hat, described what it was made of, the different shapes it could be put in, and pointed out it's many good qualities in a highly commendable manner."

"I was well pleased with the hat, but told him that I did not need one just then and that it was too bad to put him to the bother of showing it to me. 'That's all right,' he replied, 'you may need a hat some other time and I am sure you will find this one just what you want.' About a month afterwards I was in need of a hat, and this clerk had pointed out the good qualities of that particular one so well, that I went to that store to buy, although it was somewhat out of my way to go there.

Methods in Selling the Quality Goods

Salesman in Royal City Store Explains How Non-advertised Goods are Sold Over Advertised of Similar Goodness, But Which Give a Smaller Profit—Show Cards and Price Tickets the Cheapest and Best of All Salespeople—Methods of Delivery System—Power of Newspaper Advertising.

R. J. E. McCrea, Guelph, Ont.
Silver Medalist, Class B.

DEFINITE convictions as to the methods to be followed for the proper retailing of goods stand out prominently in the reply sent in by R. J. E. McCrea. It is in the busy little city of Guelph, Ontario, that Mr. McCrae works out his theories.

An Orange Sale.

This competitor believes in using the window for displaying goods, and he is indeed confident that it is a force as a business getter. Illustrative of this he mentions particularly an orange sale of one Saturday when the results totalled up to the substantial turnover of thirty cases. He says he has often displayed new goods in the window never before offered to the public, and has had success in selling these lines. In this connection he mentions dried peas in packages, soups, jelly powders, teas, coffee, baking powders, and extracts. Speaking of a case in which his window had sold goods never advertised by the manufacturer to any of his customers he says that he dressed his window during the Lenten season with a line of herring in tomato sauce, and that he had as a result a satisfactory sale of these goods. The window is dressed twice a week. With specials and bargains for Saturday on Friday night, and on Monday with new goods for introduction during the week.

Show Cards Salesmen.

He always uses show cards or price tickets, and defines them as "the cheapest and best salespeople in the store." He considers that a ticketed article is half sold, and advances the argument that women like to sell themselves the goods they buy. They like to decide for themselves, and besides they know when a price is displayed on goods they may be looking at whether they can afford to buy without there being any useless information passed between the clerk and herself.

Systematic interior display pays, he thinks. On the counters and shelves of his store they place bargains and all new lines, and also articles that have a bright appearance and so work for attractiveness in the store. Sometimes they place certain lines of goods out of sight under the counter.

In telling of the methods used in the store for displaying certain goods near the front, he mentions orange bins containing one case, tables for special displays, oyster cases, glass show cases for confectionery, and glass fronted counters for package teas. He believes that women buy goods they see displayed in the store, and buy them particularly because all women like to see what they buy.

Mr. McCrea says that he always asks customers to buy vertain goods not asked for. To use his own words he says: "I take all they will give and then introduce new lines." He seems to imply that he never interrupts a customer in giving an order under the belief that to break in at such a time tends to confuse the customer and to cause the store at that particular time at least to lose a certain quantity of the order which may be forgotten in the flurry.

Selling Cleansing Powders.

This salesman says that a highly advertised manufactured article is more easily disposed of to a customer if the clerk wants to sell it, but a non-advertised article of similar quality can be sold just as easily, and this is done when it produces a better profit. He cites an instance of a cleansing powder. This was a new line. The selling talk he used was that it was cheaper than another line which they have previously sold, but that it was just as good in point of quality. The talk continued: "We can give you three packages for 25 cents instead of selling the other at 10 cents straight." The point was insisted upon that the buyer was not paying for the advertising of the other line and that also the new article was of domestic manufacture. The stipulation was made that if the goods were tried and found to be unsatisfactory the money paid out for it would be cheerfully refunded.

Telephone Saves Trips.

There is a telephone in the McCrea store and it is regularly counted upon to increase sales of the establishment. The method followed there is to ring up certain customers every morning before the delivery waggons start out on their run in that direction. This is done because it saves extra trips and often lands orders which otherwise would not be given. Customers are also informed from the store by telephone of any special line that may have come in of all special sales and notified of all bargains.

Good Missionary Work.

Goods not asked for are always suggested to customers. He says that this policy results in the sale of extra goods, but he points the warning that salesman must not insist too strongly in the matter. He believes implicity that a clerk can often annoy as well as sell, but he concludes hopefully that by this method of suggestion a great deal of good missionary work is done and that many future sales are effected when the results seem to be the least important.

Power of Grocer Ad.

Mr. McCrea is a great believer in newspaper advertising, and has frequently forwarded copies of his endeavor in this regard to The Canadian Grocer for criticism. He says that once an ad. of his offering tea at a certain price was published, together with a criticism, in this paper. As a result he says that that an order came to them all the way from Nova Scotia for a chest of that tea.

As another illustration he says they advertised sugar one day in the local papers at a special price and that when the business was closed for the day it was found that eighty bags of this staple had been disposed of.

Believes in Advertising.

He doesn't believe in the use of circulars as part of an advertising campaign because he says that the results are or have at least been in his case, poor. He finds this to repeat itself in regard to programmes and other forms of novelty advertising. The public he says, does not respond as is the case with the newspaper publicity. Other advertising methods he believes in, include good delivery wagons, the giving away of novelties to farmers at country fairs, and the sending out of a canvasser to gather in new business. He says that the country fair part of the campaign is good as far as results are concerned, and also that canvassing for new business is productive of excellent returns.

Store Equipment.

Mr. McCrea is a believer in equipment, and in his store there are installed computing scales, meat slicer, electric cash register, coffee grinder, display bins, glass front display shelves and electric lighting. He looks upon the electric cash register as a particular value in speed and accuracy, and in honest dealings. The refrigerator saves the perishable goods and the coffee grinder insures fresh coffee always. The display bins sell goods, and the electric lighting shows the goods.

The Delivery System.

In store ceilings he says that he prefers the metallic. The window is large and has two panels. He would rather that it had but a single plate glass.

As to delivery, they have four horses and the methods for insuring good service in this department are simply contained in having one head driver and the others with their own routes. They have three runs in the morning and four in the afternoon.

They keep a check on the orders and the drivers are responsible for goods.

In book-keeping they have an envelope file check system and ledger. The best feature of this is that for small accounts, it is handy and quick. The ledger he says is best for big accounts. It is accurate and always ready.

He figures profits on sales always. The average that he aims to secure is 25 per cent. It should be that he says.

Learning the Goods.

He strives to learn more about the goods in the store by reading about the source and cultivation of various spices, teas and other products in The Canadian Grocer, and he says he diligently delves into all possible books relating to grocery matters. He finds that the trade paper is useful to him because it gives him ideas on prices and in the getting of prices, ideas on store management, and other departments of regular grocery business.

Keeps a Want Book.

As to the store methods for buying goods, in the McCrea store there is a want book kept by the heads of the department. Great caution is exercised and cash is paid in every case. All possible discounts are taken, and the travelers are treated with every possible courtesy.

This clerk believes that goods can be sold to customers on the recommendation of the man behind the counter, because the purchaser knows that she can trust the judgment of the seller for at least the first trial. In describing the other methods used for the increasing of sales he says that one article is pushed each day. New goods are displayed on the counter, and an ad. is pasted in the window. Show cards are used, and the people in the store demonstrate continually any new article. All the new orders are sampled before being sent on to customers.

The Merchant Who Has Come to Realize That Success of His Business Depends Almost Entirely Upon His Selling Power—The Story of the Canned Chicken—Why Salesmanship Demands Vision—The Story of Tom Baggs and His Study of Housekeeping—Caution to be Used in Campaign.

By Victor Lauriston.

THERE was a time when land was cheap. That was the time, too, when stores were few and far between. When the farmer wanted to make more money, he took out a patent for another hundred acres or so. The cross-roads store-keeper did not need to go after business—it came to him because it had nowhere else to go.

But that was another age in Canada's history. Nowadays, when the farmer wants to make more money, he studies how to make two bushels of corn grow where one grew before. And the merchant, with half a dozen competitors in a couple of blocks, goes after his business and gets it only when he goes after it hard enough.

Blamed the Weather.

Meanwhile the storekeeper, if a certain amount of business didn't come to him, blamed the location, the weather, or the bad crops.

Now, the merchant realizes that the success of his business depends largely—almost entirely—upon his own selling power. He must make two, three or four sales where one comes to him.

The salesmanship of to-day consists in selling to the customer more than he came to buy—and sending him away satisfied that his extra purchases are better business for him than for you.

Chicken Came Home.

It happened a winter ago. "Gimme a pound of coffee," remarked a customer. And then as the grocer handed down an advertised brand, "Do you mean to tell me," he queried, jocularly, "that they've got canned coffee now? Why, they're canning everything nowadays, aren't they?"

The grocer smiled.

"That they are," he returned. "Why, we can sell you chicken—chicken already cooked for you, with all the bones taken out, with the real chicken taste and guaranteed tender—cheaper than you can buy the uncooked bird on the city market."

"I'll try it if I ever get rich enough," remarked the customer, as he sauntered out with the coffee under his arm.

Customer Came Back.

That was in March. In the middle of June the self same customer dropped into the self same grocery.

"We're going down the river for a picnic," he remarked, "and I thought some of that canned chicken you mentioned a while back would be just the thing for lunch."

The grocer whisked a can from the shelf in businesslike fashion.

"Going down in a launch?" he questioned. "Yes. A day on the water certainly gives you an appetite. It pays to take a nice lunch then. We sell lots if cooked meats to customers—corned beef, jellied hock, veal loaf, cooked ham. Most of them take two or three kinds, for sandwiches."

Selling Other Goods.

The customer decided to vary the chicken with some corned beef. By the time this was wrapped the grocer had impressed on him the added zest imparted by pickles—good quality pickles. He worked in a can of prepared mustard incidentally for sandwich purposes.

"I suppose you will have plenty of cake?" added the grocer. The man's recollection failed him, but he readily agreed that a pound of mixed biscuits would be a pleasant addition to the menu. A bit of suggestion many months back had brought the customer back for one item of his picnic lunch—and intelligent suggestion had added to this first sale several items more.

Topical grouping.

Salesmanship demands vision, just as much as does empire building. The man who, with his fancy picturing future farms and cities, throws two lines of steel across an unpeopled prairie, has, after all, very little on the man behind the counter who believes in his inmost heart that the man who buys one box of macaroni at thirteen cents will purchase two for a quarter and invest in some cheese as well. Each takes chances on missing the mark; and each makes better returns as a result of taking chances.

Topical Salesmanship.

"Topical salesmanship" is the term one dealer applies to his method of suggestion.

Mentally, he groups his goods, not according to price, but according to the uses to which customers put them. Instead of looking at each article individually, he co-relates them. He has his house-cleaning group, his pickling group, his preserving group, his light lunch group—and so on. The same article may be mentally classified in half a dozen groups. That is non-essential. The gist of his scheme is that he trains himself to think of these articles in logical groups. Mention preserving, and in an instant he can call to mind, and deftly suggest to a customer, all the items necessary to the progress of strawberries from box to sealer.

Mental Kicks.

"Frequently," he declares, "a customer not helped out by suggestions from the grocer will forget some needful article, or will fail to think of something he would otherwise buy. He may order the article when he remembers, but in many cases he just administers a few mental kicks for his forgetfulness. My policy is to suggest to every customer at least one article in addition to that for which he first asks. I may call his attention to a new line of goods. Where he buys for a certain purpose, I take that as my cue and make suggestions along the same line. Suppose a housewife buys a broom in house-cleaning time. The chance is that she will respond to suggestions of furniture polish, sweeping compounds, and kindred house-cleaning accessories. In the preserving season, in booking an order for a crate of strawberries, I make a point to mention sealers, rubbers, sugar, spices for pickling, sealing wax—and suggest the experiment of canning pineapples when they're cheap."

An Advisory Capacity.

In carrying out this idea, remember just one thing. Crowd the idea of selling well into the background. Never importune the customer to buy. Make your suggestion in a purely advisory capacity, as though you were a self-constituted committee of one to attend to his comfort and welfare.

Many merchants adopt this advisory role, particularly toward customers of long standing. "I am solicitor general to your kitchen," declares one; and in that capacity he invites consultations from people who buy, and urges them to bring to him such little difficulties as may beset their grocery experiences. A personal relation is thus built up.

To suggest successfully, you must know; and to know you must study your business—and more than your business.

The Story of Tom Baggs.

Tom Baggs (I'll call him that because it isn't his real name) is one of the best grocery salesmen I know of. He was a country boy when he started clerking in Thompson's store a few years ago. Tom was young, and possessed the usual modicum of ambition. He had a vague idea that he was there to learn the grocery business, and that eventually he might set up in business for himself. Between doing a thing in the line of duty and not doing it, he believed in doing; and that he did he instinctively preferred to do well.

In came a customer one day and slammed down fifteen cents for a cake of ——. (That's as good a name as any for a scouring compound used for the finest class of metal work). Tom wrapped up the cake, and jolted the cash register.

The Garrulous One.

A garrulous lady arrived some hours later.

"Have you anything good for cleaning windows?" she enquired, in part.

Better Go to a Drug Store for Something to Polish Windows.

"Mine are dirty and I want to make them shine. Soap and water take off the dirt, but soap and water don't make them bright."

Tom picked these nuggets of meaning out of a whole quartz mountain of words, to which he listened in a sort of bored way. On the spur of the moment he couldn't think of anything in stock that would make windows shine. "Better try a drug store," he suggested, politely; and Mrs. Garrulous went out.

Fifteen minutes later, happening to pick up a cake of Cleno on the counter, Tom Baggs read on the wrapper the significant words: "Unexcelled for cleaning glass."

And, with that cake of Cleno a few feet away he had sent a customer to the drug store where, doubtless, the same article would be sold her.

"Only fifteen cents," some clerks would have commented, and then forgotten. But the petty incident jostled Tom Baggs from his every-day vague complacency on the subject of the grocery business, and set him thinking.

To Study Goods.

If he had known everything about the uses of Cleno, he would not have missed that sale. Logically, if he knew everything possible about every other item in stock, he would make many more sales through added ability to supply unnamed "somethings" for this purpose or that. He set himself to study the goods. To "know the goods" became for him an essential article of faith in his religion of grocerydom.

Household Affairs.

It was probably weeks afterwards that the chance remark by Mrs. Garrulous regarding the failure of soap and water to produce a shine recurred to him. He was at the moment full of the—to him—new idea of "knowing the goods." The old woman's words, tossed up amid his thoughts one day like driftwood on the crest of a wave, struck him "all of a heap."

"Why did I never think of that before?" he demanded.

He had evolved a new philosophy of grocerydom: That the grocer existed to cater to the house-keeping department of every family. Yet how many grocery clerks knew anything of the processes of their mother's kitchens?

In Landlady's Kitchen.

How many, for that matter, knew that, while soap and water were good enough for washing windows, something additional was needed to make the panes glisten like the Koh-i-noor?

That was why Tom Baggs suddenly became deeply interested in his landlady's kitchen, and commenced to study household arrangements with a keen and observant eye.

His fellow clerks quickly noticed, too, that Tom never shirked the usually unwelcome task of waiting upon the garrulous old women who wanted to tell their whole experience while buying five cents worth of clothes pegs. And, if he was willing to place an old woman like Mrs. Garrulous on the same plane as bright little Mamie Reilly who attended dancing school, why, they were quite willing to let him do it. So, while the other clerks talked to Mamie Reilly, the bigger proportion of the housekeepers—women who had, some of them, decades of household experience behind them and were past masters in the art—fell to Tom's lot. He listened to them with a patient attention that won for him a reputation as a remarkably polite young man. Further, he amassed much information in regard to housekeeping.

The Dreary Menu.

Amid this information he discovered some common weaknesses in housekeeping. The bane of the average home, he speedily learned, was a dreary sameness in the menu. The average woman knew a limited number of dishes—her repertoire of puddings ran to six or seven—and these she repeated at almost set intervals. "Drive any man to drink," mused Baggs.

As the outcome of much thought he suggested to the proprietor a "Broaden Your Menu" advertising campaign. The advertising talks dilated on the charm of a varied menu to the man of the house, the fact that the most successful wives were those who could always produce a dainty surprise at dinner—and so on. Each advertisement embodied a recipe for some attractive dish calling for one or more ingredients whose ordinary sale didn't class them as staples. Later, a recipe book embodying the entire list was issued by the store. The campaign cost money; but it boosted the sale of many articles generally regarded as mere side-lines, without cutting into the staple to any appreciable extent.

The Value of System in the Stock Room

Being Just a Word or Two on The Folly of Having Order in Every Other Part of the Establishment and Chaos There—A Place for Everything and Have Everything in its Place—Some Suggestions.

By Henri R. Daniels, Dresden, Ont.

SOME night when you have taken the printed slip from your time-checking, total adding, clerk watching, customer-recording, cash register and, perhaps, assured yourself that system was a good thing, step out into the storeroom and ask yourself a few questions. Honest, now do you think you could tell just exactly what you have in that heaped up, tossed together litter of bags, boxes, barrels, fish kegs and dear knows what all? And don't you think that it would be worth something if you could tell at a glance just what you had?

Just Pure Guesswork.

There are premium oats, and salmon, and matches, because you can see the labeled ends of the packages; you feel reasonably certain that some of those bags contain oyster shell, and there ought to be a sack of rice somewhere: but all this is pure guesswork. Why! you could call in the first passerby, and he could give you as much information. What you want, and what you must have, if you are going to succeed, is that comprehensive grasp of the thousand and one little details of the art of buying and selling that will enable you to put your hand at a moment's notice upon any article in the store.

To Prevent Overstocking.

Perhaps a little more system in the stockroom, a little more care exercised in arrangement, would have prevented an occasional bit of overstocking, an occasional loss of perishable goods? You were surprised the other day when Atkins, your head clerk, unearthed that package of spoiled haddies. Then, too, there was that unfortunate little incident which cost you Mrs. B———'s trade, because the yeast cakes she had purchased at your store had lost their strength. All this and much more comes crowding in upon you, and now that you are interested, I shall try to indicate briefly a few ideas which we have found helpful in maintaining some show of order in the stockroom.

Everything in Its Place.

Never take a package from the carter and rush to put it in the most convenient place. This is very easy at the time, but soon results in chaos. Keep a clean space about the doors for the temporary placing of newly-arrived goods, and leave them there until some of the staff have time to remove each package to its correct place.

Classify all case goods wherever possible. With the small stuff, such as bluing, yeast cakes, etc., this cannot be done; so do the next best thing; group these articles, and alot them a certain corner.

For Bags and Brooms.

For paper bags construct a shelf about 7 ft. long x 18 in. wide, and 4½ ft. from the floor. Make cardboard tickets, showing size of bags, and tack these along edge of shelf. This will be one of the handiest features of your storeroom, and well worth the little time required to build it. For brooms we use racks attached to the wall at a heighth of eight feet. These are simply parallel slats about 2 in. apart and long enough to contain one dozen brooms.

Some Suggestions.

Most grocers are compelled to economize space. This can be achieved by a little study of the stock, and helps to prevent confusion. For flour, a table formed by laying inch boards on empty packing cases will be found a great convenience. The sides may be knocked out of the packing cases and the space underneath utilized as storage room. The above hints are but a few of many that may be worked out with very satisfactory results, and besides adding greatly to the efficiency of the store, means a positive saving in time and labor.

Those merchants who intend to make plants a specialty this year should be started by now. This can be made a profitable side line by proper methods and also serves to attract trade.

The store is judged by its appearance and with the opening of spring the grocer should make any needed improvements. The delivery wagon should not be forgotten in the general spring clean up.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

Fredericton Dealer Who Finds It Good to Render Praise Where It is Due—Winnipegger's Provision Methods — Department Store System—Bag Holder Saves Time and Money For Regina Merchant—Toronto Man Who Considers Refrigerator an Absolute Necessity.

Bag Holder Saves Time and Money.

Regina, Sask., May 18.—A local grocer is satisfied that he made a good investment when he purchased his bag holder. In speaking of it recently he said: "For a number of years, I had no regular bag holder, I would leave the bags of all sizes on the counters, show cases and other places. The result was that I could never find the required size without a great deal of trouble, and quantities of them were constantly being tossed on the floor and destroyed. I purchased a bag holder and it has paid for itself several times over. The bags are always kept in first class shape, none are destroyed, while the saving in having the required size on hand is a great deal, while the convenience has also to be considered."

Refrigerator a Necessity.

Toronto, May 18.—"A refrigerator is not only needed in the grocery store, it is an absolute necessity," said Wm. Miller, a grocer, on Yonge St. "The grocer who tries to get along without one is pursuing a course of false economy. It is one of the things that the grocer has to have. Without it he can not hope to have his perishable goods in good condition, and without right goods he cannot hope for a continuance of trade. The amount he saves from goods that would otherwise spoil is a big item but the most important is supplying customers with goods in the best condition. It pays the dealer to purchase a good refrigerator, even if he has to pay a little more, for the amount of ice that a good refrigerator will save will soon make up for the extra cost. Besides a good refrigerator will hold in the cold air while a poor one will allow a good deal of it to escape."

Believes in Harmony.

Summerside, P.E.I., May 18.—A local grocer believes that good-will should exist among the merchants in every community. In speaking of this recently he said; "Business men could do much to benefit themselves if they would only work together in the interest of the business which they are following instead of continually knocking each other as is usual. Now, the grocers in this community work pretty well together, which is to the advantage of all concerned. If my competitor across the street advertises a sale of canned goods, I do not do the same and cut prices away down so that neither of us is making any money. When he is conducting a canned goods special I turn my attention to some other line, such as dried fruits, so that the efforts of both of us bring results not only in sales, but in the amount of profit."

Advertising Scrap Book.

Vancouver, B.C., May 18.—A local merchant keeps what he calls an "advertising scrap book." It is just an ordinary book on the front of which is inscribed: "We handle all the high grade goods." In the inside is pasted cut-out advertisements from magazines and newspapers showing goods which he carries in stock.

In speaking of it he said: "I believe there is nothing like dealer and manufacturer working together, and of the merchant taking full advantage of the manufacturer's advertising. The book is placed on the counter and a customer while waiting just naturally picks it up and looks it over. There she will find that we carry goods which she has seen advertised in the magazines and perhaps which she had thought of sending for. At any rate it should be of as much value as a book that you had printed yourself."

In Selling Provisions.

Winnipeg, May 18.—"I always try to display a piece of ham or bacon in such a manner that it would fairly make the passerby's mouth water for a meal off that particular piece," said a provision man recently. "That is the way to appeal to your customers in order to make sales, in my opinion. Attractive presentation so as to appeal to the eye and palate of the public is the big asset in promoting the sale of provisions." The first essential is that it be displayed prominently, and therefore it is wise to have the provision counter situated where the goods will be brought most frequently under the customer's eye. Arrange the goods so that the customer will be impressed, and if they do not buy at the time, they will know where to go when they do wish to purchase.

"The appearance of a plain whole ham or roll on a counter does not particularly appeal to a customer's appetite. It might make a sale if the customer had intended to purchase, but the idea of the dealer is to work on the customer's appetite so as to make them purchase. Now instead of showing a whole roll or side on a counter, I cut it in two, lay the two pieces on a platter, place some lettuce or other green goods alongside and it presents a very appetizing appearance."

Watching for Pick-Ups.

Montreal May 78.—A business in order to be successful must show a profit in every department, which is only possible by proper attention to each department by those in charge. One of the large departmental stores in this city recognize that fact and the system is such that each department must look carefully after the profits in their part of the business. In these large stores a large quantity of goods is "picked up" and clerks have to be on the alert or the thefts would cut down the profits in the department, for which they are responsible. Detectives are employed to watch for light-fingered individuals who sometimes make a visit. If they secure any goods off these people, the department from which it is taken are obliged to buy them back, so that each time this happens, it makes a decrease in the balance of profit that the department would otherwise show. If, however, any clerk of a department detects someone in the act of taking goods, and notifies a detective they are handed back to the department. In this way clerks are given a good reason to keep a sharp look out that articles may not be taken.

Praise Where Praise is Due.

Fredericton, N.B., May 18.—"If window trimmers in many stores received more encouragement from the merchant in their work," remarked a dealer yesterday, "they would put forth more efforts in this direction. Some merchants withhold praise even for an exceptional good trim, fearing that the employe may form an exalted opinion of his work. I know from experience that when a trimmer receives some recognition of this good work he puts more brain work into the details the next time, to produce something even better. If he finds that the boss seems to pay no attention to it, whether it be good or bad, he will likely drift and take little pains in fixing it. The boss should at least take a great deal of interest in the window, which is one of the greatest selling mediums, and should encourage the window dresser to make it as valuable as possible."

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Canadian Sardines—Down 50c.

Dried Fruits—Firmer.

Canned Tomatoes—Stronger.

Montreal, May 18.—So Canadian jobbers have to go into the United States market for canned tomatoes! A report in another column of this issue announces a recent purchase of 30,000 cases of canned tomatoes to Canadian jobbers, the story emanating from Baltimore. This report at least substantiates the statements given out by the canners last year when they announced a short pack to the trade. More than one grocer was inclined to think otherwise. Jobbers have been telling from week to week about reduced stocks, until some were practically cleaned out. Others had bought more heavily and were in a better position. Therefore, an announcement to the effect that jobbers have had to go out of the country does not come as a great surprise to those who have followed the markets. It may not have been expected as soon as this.

A city traveler for one of the large wholesale houses here states that the high price of dried fruits is cutting down business almost to a minimum. "The trade I call on are doing hand-to-mouth business. Grocers," he said, "admit to me that they only want sufficient goods to say that they have a stock. Raisins, prunes, dried apples, apricots, these are the lines in which the effect is most noticeable. Men who used to have appreciable weekly sales of all these lines are practically without any goods now. They ask for but one box of raisins and so on. The price has proved prohibitive to their customers, and they do not care to handle goods that may hang on their hands." This traveler is of the opinion that this price-soaring, if long continued, will give the dried fruit business a hard blow.

Among the articles received from across the seas this week were pickles, arrowroot, canned herring, pineapples (canned), starch from England; gin Holland; light table wines, brandies and canned vegetables from France; wines from Sicily, and also from Spain. Ale, of course, formed part of the cargoes from Great Britain.

Canadian sardines are reported down 50c a case, from $4 to $3.50.

The market continues steady, with demand quite satisfactory. Failures this year have been comparatively few. The City of Montreal does not show conditions as satisfactory as those in the surrounding country. It is claimed by those who have followed the market for years that following a winter of light snowfall there is a tightness in the city. Collections among a particular class class have not been as good as they might be and, of course, the grocers catering to them have to wait until the money comes in. With not a few of the smaller grocers in the city conditions are rather pressing, but the summer is opening up well and this little stringency should soon pass. In the new districts grocers are opening up every week. The wholesale trade express satisfaction with the situation and they may be taken as an accurate criterion.

Sugar—The market here is steady and unchanged. Enquiries are encouraging in number, but there is no special feature to the trade.

A recent report on sugar conditions says: "It would seem that sugar prices have been advanced all they can be on developments in regard to the production. If we are to have higher values they will come because of an improved demand. A constantly growing demand for refined can be counted upon. We are at the outset of the season of greatest consumption. That should keep prices steady. There are sufficient supplies on hand to meet an ordinary consumption. But the fruit crops promise well, the refiners are carrying many thousands of tons less sugar than they had a year ago, the rapid advance and the demand they have had to supply preventing them accumulating a surplus, and with good trade ahead during the next four months the market should be steady enough with a good chance of bringing prices up nearer the European level."

Dried Fruits—The market loses none of the strength that has been mentioned heretofore. The situation seems to be growing tenser every week. Prices are certainly following that course and the exact character of the situation may be judged by statements to the effect that the big wholesale houses admit shortages of this line and other exhausted. Not that dried fruits are off the market, but the present situation is so strongly the combination of short spots and uncertain futures that there is nothing but firmness to the market, and it will likely continue so for some time.

A recent letter from Patras is to the effect that about 14,000 tons of currants suitable for export remain in the country. Up to the end of March the total exportations amounted to 102,000 tons, being 28,000 tons short of last year's total exports. From these figures and from the fact that the new crop does not come on the market for months yet the real significance of the situation will be apparent. Recent reports from the Mediterranean district report frosts, which have done serious harm to the nut, raisin and currant crops.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—There is not much change to the local market. There is a firmer tendency in gallon apples and tomatoes. Jobbers report a continuation of good business in spite of prices, with tomatoes, corn and peas moving out well. The inclination is to get rid of stocks, where they are held in quantities that may be considered large, but this applies to only a few lines, as canned goods are not held in abundance.

A report from Baltimore, Md., regarding canned goods will be of interest to Canadian grocers: "Spot tomatoes appear to be stiffening up all along the line, in the west as well as in the east, and at the close of business this week the trend of the market prices is upward. A very interesting and quite significant feature in the market here during this week was a liberal buying movement on the part of Canadian jobbers, who took about 30,000 cases No. 3 standard tomatoes, for prompt shipment, at 80c a dozen, f.o.b. Toronto.—A fairly steady demand is being experienced in canned goods in general. Trade is not confined to any one line differing with the several dealers. As can be expected, retailers are purchasing supplies in small quantities, and as they require them. Canned salmon is now regarded with a certain amount of interest. Prospects for a small run for the ensuing season strengthens the belief that higher prices will rule before the year is out.

Winnipeg.—Trade in canned goods has been exceptionally brisk.

Last year prices opened up at comparatively high figures, consequently the usual heavy fall demands were considerably curtailed, as country merchants did not see fit to load up at high prices, anticipating a somewhat smaller demand on that account. In spite of the high prices, however, the public appeared to want canned goods, with the result that a steady demand prevailed all winter on the local stocks, and the result is that stocks held here this spring are exceedingly low, and any blocks of goods held for sale in the east have been soon picked up. A feature of the year's trading has been the considerable amount of business transacted with the Americans, particularly in Wisconsin peas, and Baltimore potatoes.

POINTERS—

Dried Peaches—Firm.

Canned Salmon—Steady.

Currants—Firm.

Toronto, May 17.—The most marked feature in the grocery market during the past week, according to several wholesalers, has been the decided lack of demand for sugar. This was not regarded as unusual some time ago, immediately after the country had taken on heavy supplies, but a considerable time has now elapsed and with the advent of fruits such as berries and pineapples, dealers were looking for sugar to move again. However, the trade has been decidedly quiet which would evidently go to show that dealers have not as yet reduced stocks as low as they wish. Outside of this, business is reported by wholesalers to be quite satisfactory, the demand from both country and city comparing favorably with that at this time in other years. Collections might be better, according to report. "Good in spots," remarked one dealer.

Sugar.—The sugar market is stationary. Raws, while they have made little headway over a week ago, are steady and barring any unfavorable news from the primary points, will probably continue strong. The estimates of the total Cuban yield still differ considerably.

Syrup and Molasses.—The coming of warmer weather generally means a slackness in the corn syrup trade, but business is reported as quite satisfactory for the season. Maple syrup is also receiving attention. Molasses is inclined to quietness on this market. Barbadoes reports that the total of the crop this year will be about the same as last year and that the amount to be exported is growing gradually smaller.

Dried Fruits.—Raisins, especially seeded, are firm at the advance noted last week, while the condition of supplies in both prunes and evaporated apples are well known by the dealer. It has been pointed out before that the scarcity of prunes and evaporated apples had thrown the weight of demand on peaches, and that these would likely rule firm. It now looks as if this would be the case. Although the crop last year was comparatively larger than many other lines of dried fruits, these goods seem to be getting into rather small supply, and should bear attention. Holders of currants in the primary markets are not disposed to make any concessions in regard to price and that fruit continues in its firm position. Trade in the different lines, considering the high prices, is quite good.

Tea.—Teas, especially Ceylon, which has a large consumption in Canada, are firm. While the Japanese ruling has not as yet had any effect, still it has helped in creating a firmness generally in tea. The new Japanese crop is opening and cables so far have been higher, but the general situation, it is said, cannot be based on these early reports which may not reflect the true condition of the crop as a whole.

The present temperature is doing a great deal of good to the olive orchards and the remainder of the crop will doubtless allow of a greater amount of the superior oils, quotations for which are still firm, the only easiness in prices being in those for quite secondary oils."

MANITOBA MARKETS

Winnipeg, May 18.—Perhaps no better illustration of the progress of the entire west, and the general optimistic feeling prevailing could be given than a review of the western grocery trade, for the twelve months preceding this date. In every line of groceries the history has been one of steady advance in the volume of business transacted, from month to month during this period. Money has been fairly plentiful and all the wholesale houses have been, and are very optimistic regarding the progress of the west, and the chances of a good crop this year. Prices prevailing in many of the lines have been considerably higher than last year, and while wholesalers have by no means been lenient with the retailers they have not pushed delinquents too hard.

Optimism is the great factor in the upbuilding of the west, and this is noticeable on every hand. Last year in spite of the fact that considerably increased stocks were obtained the majority of the lines were underestimated rather than overestimated, with the result that this spring buyers were on the general scurry to replenish stocks, that under normal trade conditions would have lasted the entire season.

Dried Fruits.—The dried fruit situation this year was an entirely unique one, and one that is not likely to occur for many years to come. Prices prevailing throughout the entire year have been extremely high, various unavoidable circumstances having controlled conditions. At the commencement of the season, prices were moderately low, and the majority of the buyers went in for limited supplies. This was done in the face of a fairly light crop, but which under normal crop conditions in other countries would have been quite sufficient for the home demand. A world wide scarcity, however, was soon found out to be existing, and Europe became a very heavy drawer from California, the home of the local supply. The market consequently was soon bare and prices advanced rapidly. Notwithstanding the fact of the inconvenience experienced by jobbers in short stocks, a good profit was made by local houses on the advance. The Mediterranean dried fruit market owing to the world wide scarcity of other lines of fruits had to advance in sympathy. Currants opened up at fairly high prices and continued to advance slightly during the whole year. The price prevailing during this period was about one cent per pound higher than preceding year's highest price. Raisins were higher than last year, showing also a steady advance all through the season. Figs opened about the same as previous year, and while a stronger market prevailed the advance was not as marked as in currants and raisins.

Evaporated Apples.—Much has already been written regarding the condition of this line during the year. A steady advance in prices took place until stocks became so depleted that practically none can be obtained anywhere. Short crops in the east and an increased export trade are the causes attributed to present conditions.

Sugar.—The sugar market adopted practically the same tactics as the other lines. A steady advance has been in existence since last fall except for a decline of five cents per hundred pounds which occurred a couple of weeks ago. The margin of profit on sugar is extremely small, and many years jobbers come out with a deficit instead of a profit. This year, however, no money was lost in handling this line on account of the advances. The natural result is that wholesalers are wearing "the smile that won't come off."

Syrup.—The syrup market has been likewise on the advance. Owing to the scarcity of dried fruits there has been an exceptional run on this line this year, and while advances have not been as frequent as in other lines, yet the recent advance of 15 cents per case within the last month, brings the relative advance pretty well up to the average.

Coffee.—The coffee market has been rather of an erratic nature, due to manipulation. During the latter part of last year the market was decidedly bullish, advancing from day to day. For the past six weeks, however, a reaction has set in, and a gradual falling off in price has been the order of the day. While the weakness has been general the decline has not been marked to any very great extent, present prices being only about ½ cent lower than the high point six weeks ago. Prevailing prices, however, are about sixty per cent. higher than at this period last year. Manipulation of the market, as has been explained time and time again, is the cause of all this evil.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, May 18.—There were few changes of importance in prices on the local market during the past week, although an advance was noted in the price of flour. The best brand of Ontario medium jumped from $5.05 per barrel to $5.20, and the corresponding brand of Ontario full patented advanced in price from $5.25 to $5.40. Wheat still maintains a very strong position.

There is a marked scarcity of dried fruit, and prices hitherto unheard of on the local market, are being asked. It is practically impossible at present to secure evaporated apples. Fourteen cents was the price at which the last sold here, but a much higher figure would probably be asked for any that might now be offered for sale. An advance from eleven to twelve cents was noted in evaporated peaches, while raisins are also higher in sympathy with other dried fruits. Although there has been no change in the price of raisins, it is expected that the quotations for next season's goods will be considerably higher. Egyptian onions have declined from one-quarter to one-half cent per pound. Pork and beef are a little easier also.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., May 18.—An increase of five cents per hundred pounds in the price of all grades of sugar, and an advance of one cent per dozen in the price of eggs are the principal changes in the local market this week. Extra standard granulated sugar is quoted at $4.75, United Empire $4.65, and bright yellow $4.55.

Low prices still prevail for pork products. Pork is about $10 less per barrel, and beef $6, than at the same time last year.

California dried fruits continue firm, with a good demand and stocks light.

A record price was paid for apples here this week. A few barrels of choice Northern Spies reached the market, and they sold from $7 to $8. This is the highest price ever paid for apples in this vicinity. The stock was choice, having wintered well.

During the present week navel oranges have been advanced 25 cents per crate. They are quoted at $3.75. Jobbers report a good demand for oranges.

There is a marked improvement in the quality of bananas arriving on the local market. The fruit is larger and of finer quality, and are quoted $2.25 to $2.50 per bunch. Pineapples are $4 to $4.25, and grape fruit $3.50 per case. The receipts of cucumbers are larger, and the price has dropped to 7½ cents each. New cabbage are now on the market, and are quoted $2.65 per crate. Rhubarb is also down, selling at 8 cents per pound. Bermuda onions are easier at $1.75 per crate, a drop of 25 cents.

Stocks of potatoes are rapidly growing smaller, but there are no changes in price, which is $2.50 per bag.

Another cargo of molasses arrived here this week. The schooner Ainstie from Barbadoes landed 200 puncheons, 30 hogsheads, and 141 barrels.

Story of Boy Who Was Rewarded by Clerkship for Earnest Endeavor to Sell Goods While on the Round—Luck and Laziness Not to Go Together—The Taking Into Partnership — The Fire—Persistence Wins Big Reward.

By One Who Was One

"LUCK and laziness do not go together. The man who climbs must prove himself and know when to grasp his opportunities. The best advice to a young man is old and simple. Let him get knowledge and understanding. Let him determine to make the most of himself by doing to the best of his power such useful work as comes his way. There are no new recipes for success in life."

Such is the advice given to him who would attain greater things, by James J. Hill, the railroad man, who controls 20,000 miles of railroad in the United States and Canada, and who made his start in life behind the grocery counter in a small Canadian village.

Born in a log house at Rockwood, seven miles east of Guelph, Ontario, young Hill at the age of fourteen, owing to the death of his father, was forced to give up school and help support his mother and her six children. He secured a position in the village grocery store. His pay was one dollar a week. However in his first position he proved his worth and his salary was raised to three dollars a week.

We cannot all be James Hills. Opportunities presented to him and which he grasped are such that we cannot hope for. But we can, by following along similar lines, attain much greater success in life than will be ours if we are content to but drift along through life without any definite object in view.

To the young man who is willing to apply himself diligently to the work, the grocery business offers as good a chance as any other commercial endeavor. The young man who shows industry and determination will not long stand on the bottom rung of the ladder. He must first of all have the ambition to mount to heights above, but where is there a young man who has not? In the grocery business, even the youngest delivery boy has dreams of the day when he will be manager or owner of a business. Every boy builds these castles in his youth but it is only the ones with determination who ever reach those dreams in reality.

Hills of Incessant Labor.

How then may the young man in the grocery business hope to succeed? By giving careful study to the business in which he is engaged, by making a study of his goods, methods of salesmanship, and methods of management, but above all by having a determination to prove his worth. Some day he will look back with satisfaction upon the steep path up which he has traveled.

The road to success in the grocery business as in any other walk of life leads up over the hills of incessant labor and down through the valley of obstacles, but constant application and endeavor will in the end lead the ambitious youth to the position he desires. Rome was not built in a day, and the young man in the grocery business cannot expect to achieve great things in a short time. But he should remember that others before him have succeeded, and that there are excellent chances for him to do as they did.

Another incentive to the clerk in this country is the fact that all our leading merchants are self-made men. They are those who have by diligent application raised themselves from the ranks. Scores of business men could be mentioned in this country who once stood behind the grocery counter in the position of the clerk, and many of them did not even have the advantages that most clerks of to-day have. But they have succeeded and you can do the same.

"That man started to work for me just 15 years ago as delivery boy," said a merchant the other day, referring to a man who is now proprietor of three stores and with bright prospects ahead.

"I have been greatly interested in him and have been closely watching his steady advance."

Started Pretty Small.

"I remember he started in with me at $2.00 per week and from the first showed his ability and determination. He was very careful in his delivering, seeing that every parcel was put down at the customer's home in proper condition. But what impressed me most at the first were his attempts to get business. When he was out delivering, he often used to get quite large orders, which other boys had never tried to secure, as they figured they would have to deliver them again and had no particular liking for it as it was done by means of a push cart. However, he was different and had not been with me long until I recognized his value in selling goods and promoted him to clerkship. He made friends quickly and was on intimate terms with all the customers. He had ideas of his own and was constantly bringing out some new method of getting business.

"The first spring business got very dull and for a time he kept busy dusting and cleaning until everything was perfect. He then conceived the idea of going out and hunting up business. Having received my consent, he started out, and succeeded in keeping trade quite brisk. He stayed with me four years and by that time knew the business as well as I did, and was just as much concerned about the amount of business and profit.

Offered Partnership.

"He went to a little larger town and entered the employ of a grocer there. He clerked for him over a year and then the grocer recognizing his ability offered him a partnership. There was a total of $2,400 in the store, and while he had saved $800, he did not like to take a third interest, so he came to me and I made him a loan of $400, so that he could get a half interest in the business. For security he gave me a mortgage on his portion of the stock. In three years the two had moved into larger quarters and considerably increased their stock and volume of business. His partner at this time was offered a government position and so the young man had the chance of taking over the business himself which he was able to do with the money he had saved.

Burnt Out.

"A good manager and salesman and with a thorough grounding, now with the reins in his own hands, things began to look bright. However, there are obstacles which every man runs against and about a year after taking over the business he was burnt out, and though he carried insurance, it did not completely cover his loss.

"He was not discouraged though, the reverse seemingly serving to make him put forth still greater efforts. He opened up again in another district where competition was keen. He saw that if he were to succeed, he must have some feature, so he opened up an ice cream parlor in connection with his store and the two combined boomed trade for him. He had soon regained the ground lost by the fire

FOREST CITY NEWS.

London Retail Grocers' Association to Have Moonlight Excursion.

London, May 18.—At a meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, held in their hall last Tuesday evening, it was decided to run a moonlight excursion on June 7th. They have chartered the steamer "Forest City" for a two hours' sail on Lake Erie, and have also engaged an orchestra for dancing. No doubt a large number of the clerks and their lady friends will enjoy this part of the program.

The matter of the annual excursion was left over for a special meeting to be called by the president.

A resolution of condolence with the widow of the late J. A. Tucker was passed and order to be spread on the minute book; a beautiful floral wreath was sent by the association. The President, Mr. Norman McLeod, Vice-Pres. G. B. Drake, and Treas. Thos. Shaw, represented the association at the funeral. Mr. Tucker was a valued member of the association ever since its inception and he will be greatly missed. He leaves a wife and two young sons, to mourn his loss.

PAID RENT WITH NAIL-PULLER.

Retired Grocer Recalls Old Time Economies.

St. Louis, U.S.A., May 18.—"When I was in the grocery business," said John Mischel, retired grocer of this city, "I paid my rent by using a nail puller. I did it by saving all the boxes and barrels and selling them at the end of the month or so. I could sell them at a good profit because I did not take a hammer or hatchet and knock the heads in or rip off the lids, but because I used a nail puller and extracted the nails in the right way, without injuring the heads or lids."

"Success in the grocery business," he continued, "comes from watching the business end and taking care of the little things. You have to watch the business if you want to make money.

"I always counted the fish I got and always counted the pickles too. I often found shortages in both, and saved money by doing it. Many grocers fail because they do not watch these 'little things.'"

SELLING POWER OF A WINDOW.

Montreal Dealer Clears Out a Line of Figs.

Montreal, May 18.—The selling power of a window was well exemplified on Saturday in the grocery store of John Robertson & Son, St. Catherine Street, West. A special sale of figs was put on for the purpose of clearing out a stock the house decided to get rid of. The figs in boxes were given a prominent portion of the window, and a show card placed beside it. The announcement not only included the price but also a reference to the quality of the fruit. The price was reduced to half the usual figure, a fact that was not overlooked by the public. The result was a sale of between 300 and 400 boxes during the one day. It was learned that on a former occasion a special sale of that kind resulted in a sale of about 700 boxes. Of course the price was an allurement but the card was invaluable.

FINES FOR LAW-BREAKERS.

St. John Council Makes Early Closing Compulsory.

St. John, N.B., May 18.—For several years past in this city, it has been the custom among the retail grocers to close their places of business each evening at 7 o'clock, with the exception of Saturdays or nights before holidays, when the closing hour was generally extended three or four hours. In years gone by this rule has been abided by only through the honor of those engaged in the business, that is, the grocers kept their word to close at 7 p.m., although they were not compelled to do so.

At a meeting of the municipal council this week, however, it was decided to proclaim early closing as law, and to subject merchants in all branches of trade to a fine of $40 for closing later than the stated hour of 7 o'clock, except on Saturdays or evenings before holidays. Of course this law will make but little difference with the grocers, other than that they will now be compelled to clase early, whereas formerly, they did so voluntarily. The law will probably become effective about the first of June.

FIRST USED WAGON IN ST. JOHN.

St. John, N.B., May 18.—A. S. Sprague, who has conducted a grocery store in Main street, for thirty years at the same stand, has sold out his business to Messrs. Robinson. Mr. Sprague has been very successful since starting in business with the late John Souther, thirty years ago, and recalls with interest, old-time customs in contrast to modern methods of selling goods. Mr. Sprague was about the first grocer in the northern section of the city to use a delivery wagon to convey goods to his customers, at that time a sloven being the chief vehicle employed, and used only for carting heavy goods.

THE VALUABLE SALESMAN.

The salesman is much more valuable if he is able to make suggestions that will assist customers. Women do not know just what to order at certain times, and it is well that the clerk be able to make some good suggestions. Just at this time of the year the housewife finds herself in somewhat of a quandary in the matter of having something different for the meals each day. Often a customer will say: "I don't know what to get for a change to-day. We are tired of tomatoes and corn, and there seems nothing to take their place." If you are able to suggest some different line that she would like, such as beans or peas, she will be very thankful. At other times they will want a change from the dried fruits for pie filling. Here is your chance to suggest canned pumpkin or apples, lemons or babanas, or perhaps you have a prepared pie filling on your shelf that she would like. At other times she is preparing for a luncheon or other similar affair and would appreciate any advice which the clerk could give in this line. The trouble with many clerks is that they know nothing about these matters, and are therefore unable to make any intelligent hints to the buyer. It is, however, part of their business to learn this and they will make themselves much better salesmen if they will give a little thought and study along this line. Merchants would do well to take the lead in this and set an example to the clerks.

SELLING POWER OF LIGHTS.

It may cost some to light a store properly. It should also be remembered that it costs still more to leave it half lighted. A well-lighted window or interior helps a great deal in the making of sales.

A well lighted store in a block of poorly lighted places of business will generally get the bulk of the trade. It stands out like a beacon and has a peculiar attraction for customers.

It also shows the goods up much better. Take for instance a display of pickles in a window. With a poor light, the passer-by can recognize that they are pickles but cannot read the brand on the bottle, or other little details. With the well lighted window, in addition to the mere display, the strong light is reflected back by the bottles, and the brand and price card can be distinctly read. A much better impression is made on the customer.

After Forty Years

One of the most successful retail grocers in Canada, whose business capacity has enabled him through all the varying conditions of over forty years to keep steadily on the highway of success, building one of the largest retail trades in the Dominion and accumulating a large fortune, said to the writer the other day, "Cheap trade is no good to any man. It doesn't stick. Quality of goods and quality of service are the two things to consider in the grocery business."

Practical advice, this, and it applies especially to tea.

In RED ROSE TEA you have quality that has made it a standard among tea experts, and this, combined with such efficient service, has won and holds the confidence and co-operation of the trade.

Your customers cannot buy tea of better quality than Red Rose.

Provisions Decline at Montreal

Supplies There in Excess of Requirements — Other Markets Rule Fairly Steady—United States Markets are Slightly Easier—Old Country Markets Quite Weak Yet — Butter is Easier Under Increased Supplies—Eggs Showing a Somewhat Similar Tendency.

Canadian live hog markets have ruled steady to a shade easier. Provisions in Montreal have seen a general decline in prices, owing apparently to the accumulation of supplies on hand. The Old Country market for bacon is as yet quite weak. The western states' hog market ruled higher last week, owing chiefly to moderate supplies, but was slightly lower at the beginning of this week under liberal arrivals.

One authority says: "It looks like a moderate run and a steady market the rest of this week, but we expect a pretty heavy run again next Monday. Think there are plenty of hogs to supply the demand, and do not believe that prices will make any permanent advance for a few weeks yet; in fact, we are likely to see another decline just as soon as runs increase, but feel that prices will not go any lower than they did last week."

The general tone of the butter market is also towards easiness. The arrival at most centres continues large, the production at many points exceeding that of the same period last year. With the prospects for the production of butter good, it does not appear as if higher prices should be seen for a short time. However, the heavy demand from the West and the Pacific Coast which was felt a few weeks ago might at any time relieve the producing centres of any surplus. Present makes are not such as to allow storage, full grass butter not having yet started to be made.

Eggs are unchanged to a shade easier under steady receipts. While stocks at some centres have been stored in limited quantities others feel it unsafe with talk of reciprocity to store supplies at present prices. Some United States houses are offering eggs which they will hold in storage until any time up to January next and lay them down at Canadian points at a lower figure than eggs can be stored here at present.

The new make of cheese is increasing and prices exhibit a slightly easier tone. Old cheese, however, is very limited in quantity and prices are firm.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—Owing to supplies being in excess of requirements, a general decline in prices was felt this week. Some lines of barreled pork have declined $1 to $1.50 per bbl.; pure and compound lard is off and so are hams. The market for live hogs was somewhat weaker. Dressed remained the same. Demand for pork products is fairly good, but supplies have apparently been creeping ahead.

Provisions.—On the surface, the provision market appears featureless this week. Prices down the whole list are unchanged from a week ago, and whether temporarily or not, the decline in live hogs has halted. Higher prices were paid by some packers towards the latter part of last week, but are again this week announced at last week's opening price, namely $5.75 at country pointsf The Old Country bacon market is still reported quite weak.

Butter.—The tendency is toward easiness again under continued heavy shipments, especially in creamery which is down another cent. Supplies are not of a quality to allow storage, and with the demand not measuring up to arrivals, an easier feeling is only natural. Dealers are not at least looking for higher prices, while if heavy shipments continue, there is danger of further easiness in the market.

Eggs.—Eggs are unchanged to a shade easier. There is a fair arrival. Some dealers are storing stocks, while others regard it as a gamble to do so at present prices, in the face of the pending reciprocity proposal. "Prices will have to come down to a level with United States prices," said one dealer. "Eggs are being offered at St. Paul and other Western United States' markets, by firms that will store them until January next, supply cases free and lay them down here from ¾ to 1 cent. below the price that they can be stored at here now."

Cheese.—New cheese is slightly easier and prices have been shaded ¼ cent. per pound. Trade is not overly brisk in any make of cheese, as new is not ready for present use and old is in small supply and high in price, from 14½ to 15 cents being asked.

The Real Meaning of the Word Quality

Typical Instances How One Dealer Continually Realized on His Excellent Service—Man Who Got Things That Were Wanted—Man Who Delivered But Once a Day, and Lost Nearly All His Customers.

By James Simpson.

THE meaning of the word "quality" in the grocery store goes farther than the handling of high grade goods for it also pertains to the kind of service that the store gives to its patrons. The quality of "treatment" which a store gives to its customers decides to a large extent the patronage which that store shall receive.

If Jones and Smith, two grocers on the same street, can buy goods at the same price and on the same terms, they should be able to sell those goods at the same figure. The getting of trade then resolves itself into which store can give the best service to its customers.

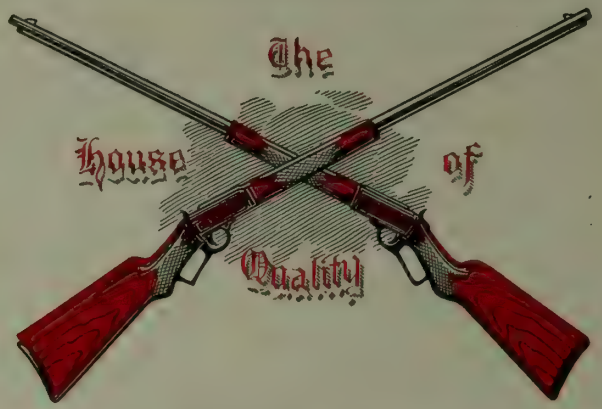
A lady customer was about to visit, a grocery store to order some goods. There was one article of which she was doubtful whether the grocers in her neighborhood kept or not. She said: "I will go to Jones'. If they haven't it, they will get it for me."

Realizing on Service.

There was a case in which the grocer had realized upon a reputation for trying to give the best service to customers. It resulted in bringing a customer by another grocery to his store. If he had not impressed this customer with the service he gave customers, she would likely have stopped at the first store she came to.

The writer was in a Winnipeg home not long ago when the housewife was sending a youngster to the store for a parcel of goods. "You had better go to Smith's," she said. "They take more care in wrapping up the parcels. You will not be so apt to break it on the way home."

Thus Smith by his care in wrapping up goods had gained this woman's favor.



One Who Knew.

But Smith showed himself a person who knew that service counts. When the younster asked for the goods—50 cents' worth of sugar—Smith sent one of his clerks back with the youngster to carry the parcel. Thus he made a still better impression on the customer, and she remarked: "I like to deal at Smith's. He always tries to please his customers. I went down to Johnson's one morning last week and ordered some goods and he did not send them up until late in the afternoon, and when he did get them here, the parcel of cornmeal was broken open and quite a bit of the contents lost. When I pay for goods I like to have them delivered in proper condition."

The matter of delivery is another important factor in the grocery store's service. The store that can have goods delivered shortly after they are ordered is the store that will attract customers.

Delivered Once a Day.

A merchant several months ago decided that he would deliver only once a day. He thought customers were requiring too much of him by asking for goods to be delivered at all hours. In a month he found that many of his best customers were making a large reduction in their purchases. He began to enquire the reason and found that they were ordering from him only those goods which they were not in a hurry for, while when they wanted goods at once, which was quite often, they ordered from the dealer who gave prompt delivery. It was only because he had an old established trade that he held even the partial trade. After considering the matter again he decided that he would go back to the old method of delivering three times a day.

Believes in Persistent Advertising

Policy Followed By Big Store in Montreal That Has Always Produced Results—The Typographical Error That was Made Good at The Counter—The Customers Who Came in Asking for Lines of Important Goods—Circulars Sent Out and Clerks Kept Always Informed.

By Henry Thomson.

THERE may be retail grocers in some parts of the Dominion who use more newspaper space than Fraser, Viger & Co., Limited, Montreal, but few have pursued as consistent an advertising policy, and likewise it might be safely said that few have obtained better results than this grocery firm in the eastern metropolis.

Get Direct Results.

They are firm believers in daily newspaper advertising and an almost endless number of instances might be cited to show that direct results are regularly received from their advertisements. When customers take the trouble to clip out the "ad." and bring it down to the store, they feel they are getting good results.

One particular case was recalled by Mr. Alex. Davidson, manager of Fraser, Viger & Co. It happened that by a typographical error (which by the way covereth a multitude of sins and errors) one line in their ad. read, three tins of canned peas for twenty-five cents, where it should have been two.

Lived Up to Mistake.

The error was not discovered until too late and it was decided to give the three tins just as the "ad." offered, but at the same time to tell the customers that it was a mistake. Mr. Davidson concluded that it would be another opportunity to find out to what extent the "ads." were being read. All doubts were removed by that day's experience for many took advantage of the printer's mistake. The idea of giving the extra can rather than disappoint the people who came to claim it, cemented the bond with the customers where a refusal might have turned some of them away. When they found out that the store was living up to the error in the "ad.", those who took advantage of it went away with even a more favorable opinion of the company's methods.

It Sells New Goods.

Newspaper advertising is a valuable asset to a grocer who is endeavoring to sell new goods. This has been Mr. Davidson's experience as manager of Fraser, Viger & Co. This firm frequently takes up new lines which must be introduced and the selling power within the store is much enhanced by the introduction given through the newspaper space that has been contracted for. It is interesting to note a few of the instances of how new lines have been secured and what has been done with them.

Built Up Sardine Trade.

A member of a prominent club in Montreal once mentioned to Mr. Davidson certain Norwegian sardines which he had tasted somewhere in his travels and which he wished could be obtained in Montreal. Mr. Davidson decided to try a small lot and ordered one case, following a policy of what might be called caution with unknown goods. It was not long before a general demand was felt for these sardines and now the firm has its own brand and Norwegian sardines are sold everywhere.

Wanted Another Line.

Another customer was traveling in Egypt and secured a particular wine from the estate of the Baron de Rothschilds. It was mentioned to the firm when the customer returned to the city and now is carried rather extensively. Another instance was a caffiene-less coffee. It was introduced by this firm practically entirely through the medium of the press and of course by the selling power of the clerical staff. Mr. Davidson makes trips to the Old Country and invariably brings back with him a score or more of new lines including all kinds of articles that are to be found in a grocery store. A customer asking for some new article not carried in stock is accommodated, and the other customers are tried for the purpose of learning whether the article is likely to become generally popular.

Circulars Sent Out.

Apart from the newspaper advertising and the selling power of the clerks, circulars are sent out regularly. One method of accomplishing this is by sending a circular to each customer with every financial statement, generally monthly. Mr. Davidson is also a believer in the idea of giving special selling attention to one or two articles every day, and this method is regularly carried out. Seasonable goods receive special consideration. Lime juice, for instance, is not an appropriate selection for this method in winter time.

All Doubts Were Removed by That D ay's Experience.

Changing The "Ads.".

Any Montrealer reading either the principal morning or evening paper knows the name of Fraser, Viger & Co., if they have never seen the store. The company's advertisement is always in the same position and always on the same page. Moreover, it is changed practically every day with the result that every ad. has a special interest to the reader. In addition the articles referred to are chosen for their value to the consumer and special attention is given to the seasons and the articles that are respectively appropriate for them.

Rolled Oats Advance 20 Cents a Barrel

Result of Higher Oat Market as Pointed Out Last Week—Oat Market, However, is Slightly Easier Again—Wheat Values Not so Strong as a Week Ago—Flour Firmness Relieved to Certain Extent—Favorable Prospects for Wheat Crop.

The feature of the week was an advance af 20 cents per barrel in the price of rolled oats, which cereal was reported firm in the last issue in sympathy with the higher values for the raw material. It was also pointed out that flour showed considerable strength but that many millers believed the wheat market would not hold and were inclined to leave flour prices unchanged. The wheat market has weakened with a slight reduction in quotations, and flour has therefore lost a certain amount of the firmness it exhibited last week.

"Those who have anything like an intimate knowledge of the wheat situation feel assured that the present advance will be continued for several days, but that ultimately a sharp break will follow. In a market such as this the break may, of course, come at any time, and as a result it is considered to be an exceptionally dangerous market to trade in. The operations of the big Chicago manipulators continue to be the overshadowing influence, and as long as conditions remain in the present state of uncertainty normal influences must be laid aside."

The world's supply of wheat on May 1, was 193,983,000 bushels compared with 187,983,000 last year, and 136,844,000 in 1909.

However, a despatch from Chicago says that sentiment among some wheat traders has undergone a change to the bull side based on a hardening of the situation abroad, unfavorable crop outlook in Russia, reduction in the world's supply and the fact that crop prospects may not continue so favorable."

The advance of 20 cents in rolled oats makes the second rise of that amount within a month due to the higher values in the oat market. However, the market has weakened slightly this week, export bids being lower.

MONTREAL.

Flour. — A bullish tendency in the wheat market has added new strength to flour. The prospects for the new crops according to report depend largely for their brightness upon weather conditions. The movement has changed from a bearish tendency to the opposite direction. There is a good demand for flour and a feature is the increased demand from European sources for spring wheat flour with quotations slightly higher. As stated above, the market is slightly firmer with the tendency just now tending upward.

Flour.—As pointed out last week, some millers were inclined not to raise flour prices, believing that wheat would not hold its position. This has been the case, and while No. 1 Northern Manitoba was quoted at $1.00½ a week ago, it has now dropped to 99 cents, thus lessening the firmness in the flour market to a certain extent. One miller in speaking of the situation said: "With the present large available stocks of wheat, I do not think we will find it needful to raise flour prices." However, wheat quotations will rule the flour market, but the wheat situation at the present does not look very bullish. Ontario wheat is holding quite firm at prices ranging around 85 to 86 cents.

The Baker is Still Far From Supreme

Just a Few Hints to the Effect That the Canadian Housewife is Still Using a Large Quantity of Flour — How One Dealer Corners Trade in Average Town—The Season for Cereals—Displays.

By Henry D. Brown.

THE baker is still far from being supreme. The love of the home-made bread still lingers. The amount of flour used by the housewife is still large and should form a large portion of the merchant's trade. Especially in the country there is a good demand for flour while even in the towns and cities, there are many who still bake their own bread, while many more could be induced to, if proper methods of selling flour was used. At any rate in all communities there is a good sale for pastry flour.

A housewife the other day was about to bake. She needed some flour and some other lines of groceries. She said: "If I go to Janes at the first corner, I will not get good flour. Smith, keeps good flour, but he is three blocks away." But she went the three blocks to Smith's and bought all her groceries. The merchant should think over this It shows that the flour trade controls a great deal of the general trade of a customer.

Why is It?

"Why is it," said a traveling salesman the other day, "that some one grocer in every town seems to corner the flour trade?" Further probing into the matter seemed to show that every such merchant gave particular attention to the selection of his flour. It is decidedly one of the lines in which quality and not price rules. Where is there the housewife who is not willing to pay a little more for her flour, if she is sure that it is good? Many merchants take chances and give a customer a poor flour, believing that the lower price will prove an attraction. But the quality of the bread which that flour makes rules future buying and that is the reason that such a merchant fails to build up an extensive and steady trade in this line.

Hard to Win Back.

It is also a difficult matter to win back a customer who you have disappointed by supplying with a flour that did not make good bread. Even if a brand he may offer them in the future may be of the highest grade, that merchant will find difficulty in selling it to the customer. A customer in buying flour will generally always ask you: "Is it a good flour?" and of course the answer is "yes." That is as good as guaranteeing it. He stakes his reputation behind it in that one word and if it turns out bad, he has lost the confidence of that customer.

Selecting Brands.

Some dealers give no attention to the selection of brands. As long as it is flour they seem to be satisfied. But it has been shown that the dealer who wishes to build up a trade must handle good flour.

Window Display.

Window display is another manner of promoting sales. Here is a suggestion for a flour window. At the front, in a circular form, place small bags of flour. Behind this in the centre have a pan with flour heaped up in sloping form. Behind this raised up a little, have a large sack of flour sitting upright. On each side of the pan of flour have a slight elevation on which is placed some good large loaves of bread and further outward full sacks of flour. This can be headed: "More and better bread—that's what you want."

"Dessert 's Coming, and it's Jell-O."

Ice Cream might get such a greeting as the children give Jell-O, but not pie or any of the common kinds of pudding. The little folks like Jell-O and it is good for them.

JELL-O

is pure, sparkling, beautiful and delicious. It is so perfect that it is the delight and pride of every housewife to serve it on her table.

The merchant who furnishes what housewives want has solved a trade problem that has bothered a good many business men.

There are seven Jell-O flavors.

Eliminating the Risk In Buying Flour

Life is too short for dealers to study up and become expert on every line of goods they buy. How many, do you suppose, could select the best flour from a dozen different brands if there were no labels on the bags or barrels?

PURITY FLOUR

All brands of flour look very similar to the untrained eye. So, you see, ordinarily there is a certain element of risk in buying flour. It is to eliminate this element of risk that we stamp the PURITY trade-mark on certain bags and barrels of our flour. These bags and barrels of flour consist exclusively of the high-grade portions or constituents of the best Western hard wheat. There is no low-grade flour in them, nor is any soft wheat flour added.

The PURITY trade-mark stands for the highest standard of quality yet attained in the milling of flour. It stands for certainty—for satisfaction to the dealer and the user. You take no risks when you give your order to the PURITY flour salesman, and you are safe in recommending PURITY flour most highly to your customers, especially to those who desire

To Help the Grocer in All Departments

Suggestions Calculated to Make Work of Handling the Business Lighter—The Value of Mailing List, and Methods of Securing One—The "Low-Stock" Book, and Its Important Place in Store Management—Other Ideas.

By J. B.

NO matter how large or small his business may be, the merchant should keep on hand a mailing list, revised to date, that he may at intervals send letters and circulars to his customers or those he wishes to become his customers, without loss of time in compiling the list.

The merchant must necessarily know the value of a mailing list. First, for regular customers, showing them that you appreciate their trade, and in an endeavor to cause them to increase their purchases. Secondly, for the occasional customer, to interest them so that they will become regular patrons of the store and then for those who have never dealt with you, but whom you wish to do so.

The list of regular customers is easily prepared by going over your books. By engaging occasional customers in conversation you can generally secure their name or address, and in this manner compile your second list. The names of those who have never dealt with you may in the country and village be secured from a voters' list, which may be had from the clerk of the municipality for a small sum. In the city those in your neighborhood whom you wish to interest may be secured from the city directory.

To those on this list, circulars, announcement of sales or of introduction of new lines may be sent.

The Personal Letter.

For the merchant who has the time a personal letter is a good trade puller, showing the people that you are taking a personal interest in them. A typewriter is a valuable aid for a merchant who wishes to take full advantage of his mailing list.

Want Book.

A want book is one of the necessary things in a grocery store in order to keep the stock complete. Without it a dealer will continually be running out of certain lines of goods, and that is a bad thing for the business.

Those merchants who wait for customers to ask for a certain article before they discover that their stock is gone, are inferior stockkeepers, and need to prepare some method to keep their stock complete.

Just Simple Book.

A simple book in which the clerk may note the goods that are getting low will do for the small store. In the larger store, it is well to have one of the clerks check over the stock every couple of days and see what lines are getting short, so that they may be bought before the stock completely runs out. This checking of goods may be easily done in a store where the stock is kept in a proper manner. and where all the stock of one article is kept in one place. With goods arranged properly a sweep of the eye along the shelf will show whether any article is running short. But without the want book there are many things which are liable to be forgotten. It should always be kept in a handy place, so as to be convenient for the clerks.

Future Orders.

The merchant should have some method of keeping track of his orders for goods for future delivery. If he does not do this, he is liable to forget and re-order the same article again so that he finds himself with a double supply on hand. For this, all that is necessary is a simple file or book. If a traveler leaves a copy of the order all that is necessary is to place it on the file or pin it in the book. If you should order by mail you should make a copy of the order yourself, or instruct the company you order from to send you one. This will eliminate all double ordering, and gives you an idea of what goods you have contracted for.

A price book both for the keeping of cost and selling price is a useful thing for the grocer. The merchant cannot keep his invoices so he can look up the cost of an article without trouble, but in the cost price book if properly kept it is only the work of a moment to find this out. The merchant quite often requires to know the cost of an article and this saves hunting through a long list of old invoices. The prices should be checked up whenever a new shipment of an article is received, so as to keep the figures correct. Now for the merchant who marks all his goods with the selling prices as they come in, a selling price book is not really necessary. However if this is not so, a selling price book should be kept for the convenience of clerks. The price of those articles which are not often called for may be forgotten by the clerk.

Discount Book.

Many merchants who realize the importance of taking their discounts, keep a book that they may miss none of these. As the invoices come in, all those on which any discount is allowed are placed in this book, with the name of the firm, the amount, the percentage of discount, and when it must be paid in order to get the discount. In this way they make sure that they do not miss any.

Draft Book.

A merchant in order to be prepared for his drafts when they come due, should have a draft book by which he can tell at a glance just how much he will be required to pay for a certain time ahead. This is very simply prepared. One page is devoted to each month. When a draft is accepted, the date it is due with the amount is placed in the draft book under the proper month. As the drafts are paid, it is checked off so that the merchant knows the amount of his obligations for the next day, the next week or month. Supposing a big draft comes due in a certain week. He looks up the draft book and finds he has a number to meet that week, and he will at once plan for to meet them when due, while if he did not have the draft book, he might not know about them until notified by the bank.

Vancouver, May 18.—George Bevilockway, of Nanaimo, has sold his grocery and dry goods business to James S. Knarston. The business was established in 1860, by A. Meyer & Company, and was purchased by Mr. Bevilockway in 1892, who previous to that time conducted a grocery store on Victoria Crescent.

A new grocery business in Nanaimo, has been opened by Charles Rawlinson and William Glaholm. The former has been with the A. R. Johnston Company for twenty years, while Mr. Glaholm grew up with the same business, of which his father was a partner at the time of his death. In their employ is Richard H. Sherwin, who has had eleven years' experience in the grocery business, four of which was with the A. R. Johnston Company.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Chilliwack, has unanimously decided to adopt the summer half holiday weekly, continuing until the end of September. The holiday was instituted two years ago, and the members in discussing the favor were much in its favor, both the merchants and the clerks looking forward to it. The day set is Thursday

Interior Display a Valuable Asset

Feature of Merchndising That Should be Considered as Almost of Equal Value to Window Display — Necessity of Changing Arrangement Often—Goods About Pillars—Offerings Should be Seasonable.

By James D. Smith.

WHILE the show window is a mighty important thing in modern merchandising, interior display is not neglected by those merchants who have studied the matter, and the grocer should look well after this method of increasing sales. Those who have put forth special efforts in this direction have found that the amount of time expended in this work has been spent to good advantage.

Extra care must be taken with interior displays, as they are more minutely examined by customers than is the show window, This is generally given only a glance. But the displays within the store have to be made so that they will catch the eye of the person that is purchasing or looking around.

All such displays should be timely, giving special prominence to goods that are in demand on account of the season. It will mean more money for the merchant, as sales will be larger in the line displayed if it is seasonable, than if not. For instance a display of oranges, nuts or candies, just before Christmas would make more sales than a display of tomatoes, although a display of tomatoes even at that time would cause an increase in sales.

Should Be Changed Often.

Display should be changed often, so that the customer will not be presented with the same old sight on each visit to the store. A customer after seeing a display once, loses interest in it, so it should be the aim of the grocer to have something new for her to see each time. Even if it is presented only in a different manner, it is better. Displays should constantly be interchanged and even tearing down a display and replacing the same goods in the same manner will make an improvement because of the removal of dust that is taken up in the changing.

The grocer caters to appetite and has an excellent chance to increase sales by placing eatables in tempting array. Take advantage of customers' appetites and place the goods in such a manner as to tempt them to buy. You have quite likely seen displays in candy and fruit stores that have brought a longing for a taste to you and have caused you to buy.

Made Around Pillars.

Displays may be made around pillars, and in odd corners that could be used for nothing else. Many stores have bare spots about the shelves and counters that would be greatly improved by display, and advantage should be taken of all available space, for it makes more money for the merchant.

Ideas for display may be gained by visits to other stores and to larger towns. Very often by visiting another store, you will get a valuable plan for increasing the amount of your display. Proper fixtures help a great deal and merchants should not stop at a small expense for fixtures if it is going to bring him more business.

Same Rules as in Window.

In making interior displays about the same rules should be followed as in window display. The main idea is that it be symmetrical and evenly balanced, and not only present an appearance of attractiveness, but also carry out it's real aim. That is to sell more goods. Price tickets will be found a valuable asset in making sales and plenty should be used.

Then again, the shelves themselves in a store should display goods to the view of customers, so as to make sales. They are not merely places to be filled up, but points where goods may be attractively presented to the customer. To carry out the selling idea, goods of one kind should all be placed together as a quantity of goods makes sales easier as customers will not think that they are just a few left overs.

Canned goods should not be stored in a damp place as it will rust the cans and destroy the labels.

If a box is kept handy in which waste paper and dirt off the counter, may be placed, it will keep the space behind the counter much cleaner.

The house-fly is a terrible breeder and the grocer should start early in the season in his efforts to exterminate this great pest of the grocery store.

Those merchants who do not do so, should make a practice of ringing up a number of customers each day, and enquire about their wants.

It looks all right, but will it sell goods?

Oranges Still Command a Steady Trade

Tomatoes and Strawberries are too High in Price to Materially Affect Orange Trade—Prices are Higher — Navel Season Drawing to a Close—Apples are Scarce—Potatoes are Scarce in the West—Not Overly Plentiful at Any Points—New Potatoes From the South.

Oranges are enjoying a satisfactory trade despite the fact that the sale generally falls off at this time. However, this year lines which generally take their place are none too plentiful, or else they are too high in price. Prices on oranges have strengthened again this week, the end of the navel season being not far off. There is some little waste shown in the lower grades, but the best are arriving in good condition while the arrivals at present are mostly of the better class of fruit. Prices are still quite reasonable which is in part responsible for their steady sale.

Pineapples are beginning to be shipped from primary points in larger quantities, arrivals in New York this week from Cuba and Porto Rico being fairly large. One dealer said: "With the heavy supplies just opening, there may be a little easier price for a short period but I do not think for long." Shipments will continue in fair amounts for probably five weeks when they will start to drop off. Florida pines are just starting and the crop will not be heavy, although the quality promises to be good.

Apples are certainly apples just now. Supplies are short at all centres, and prices are high. Nova Scotia reports spies selling at $8 per barrel, while in both Montreal and Toronto, the markets are extremely bare and quotations as high as $8 per barrel.

Sweet potatoes are gradually being taken off the market, with new potatoes from the south steadily gaining in favor although present prices restrict trade. Canadian potatoes are in short supply in all the western provinces, while Nova Scotia reports supplies growing smaller. Receipts at Toronto and Montreal are steady, but none too large in volume, but it seems uncertain whether this is due to the smallness of stocks held or the busyness of the farmer.

Fruitmen are looking for an increase in business for Victoria Day. Being recognized as a holiday in all parts of the Dominion, there is always an increase in the fruit and green goods business, and with favorable weather this year should be no exception. Dealers should figure on their requirements in time that they may receive their goods in plenty of time.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruit.—Favorable weather has augmented the sale of fruit of late. Strawberries are popular and the demand has been rather heavy. New fruit has been generally in good condition. Lemons are growing in demand with the continuation of summer weather and the market is firm. Grape fruit is also moving out well and affords the grocery trade an opportunity of opening up a new line. Fruits are finding their way before the public more and more every week.

Vegetables.—Tomatoes are again higher this week. Supplies are light, and in spite of high prices the demand is well maintained but is small compared to what it might have been with a steady and ample supply. Asparagus is down in price largely due to the arrival of new Canadian grown goods which are beginning to go into consumption. Sweet potatoes are being gradually taken off the market as the weather grows warmer. New beans, beets, radishes, etc., are in fair demand but it is still light.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The orange trade is keeping quite large in volume, despite the fact that it generally drops off with the advent of the warmer weather. This is accounted for by the fact that lines such as strawberries and tomatoes which generally take their place are in rather scanty supply. Navels have advanced another 25 cents per box, and are now quoted at $3.50 to $4.00. Strawberries at 18 to 20 cents are rather high for the demand to be heavy, while the quality at present is reported to be none too good. Tomatoes at present are in very short supply on this market at the high quotation of 4.50 to 5.00. This is favorable weather for the lemon trade, and they are going out freely at steady prices.

Vegetables.—A normal trade is being done in vegetables, both old and new under favorable weather conditions. Canadian asparagus is cheaper at 75 to $1 per dozen, as is also Boston head lettuce, which is quoted at $1. Old cabbage is about done, while the imported South Carolina product is higher in price, at $2.75 per crate. Egyptian onions exhibit a slightly easier feeling while Florida celery is about done, and as high as $4.50 is asked for any that there may be offered.

The potato situation is unchanged, and there are differences of opinion regarding future movement. One dealer said: "With a good demand being felt here, the advancing price at some Ontario points, only a normal offering and a big scarcity in the west, it looks to me like a strong market." However, other dealers hinted that the present limited offerings were due to the busyness of the farmer, and that there might be an increase later.

How to Make the Fruit Department Pay

Merchant Who Knows Food Values and Methods of Preparation Has Secured Good Grasp on Success—Hard Work Done on Fruit Diet—Their Medicinal Properties—Uses of Raspberries and Strawberries.

KNOWING the great food values of fruits, the many ways in which they may be prepared for the table and to utilize their comparative cheapness, is to give the dealer arguments that should help to make of his fruit department a valuable asset of the business, at least during the summer months.

The good season for the sale of fruits is with us, and the grocer should make the most of it. Below are given the food values of different fruits and as each of these come on to the market, the dealer might use the argument to advantage in pushing their sale.

Their Sustaining Quality.

Many people have the idea that fruits are taken more for the agreeable taste than for the benefit to the system, whereas the best and hardest of work can be done on a meal of fruit. There are several reasons why fruit is important as a food. It is itself a food, a complete and full nutriment for the body. It is of essential value in assisting other foods to be digested, and is of utmost value in helping the body eliminate waste matter. The acid in fruit assist in digesting the fats in food. In some forms of disease fruit is given because it is both curative and nutritive.

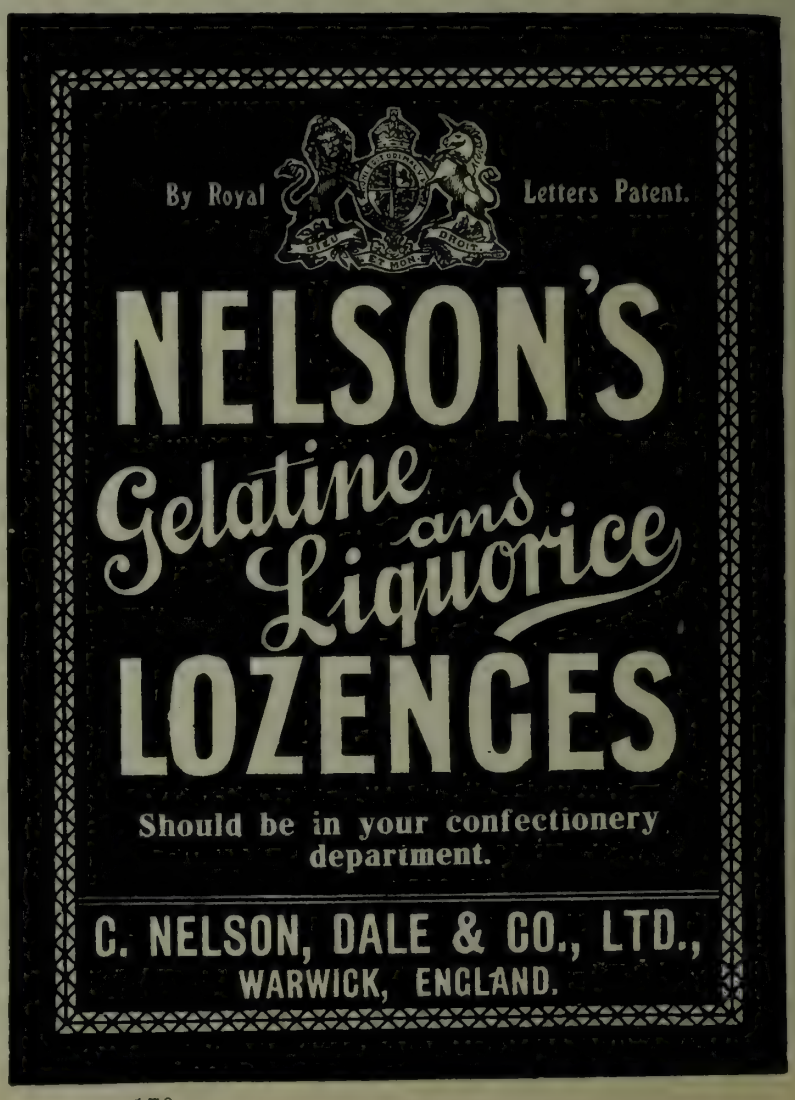
Fruits supply a variety of flavors, mineral substances, some carbo-hydrates and necessary waste for aiding in intestinal movement. The flavors are most valuable possessions as stimulants to the appetite and aids to digestion. The acids are converted in the body into the corresponding carbonates and so help to render the blood more alkaline. In some diseases, such as scurvy, this property is turned to good account.

Assures Health and Energy.

Recent investigations show that fruit as a food, assures both health and energy. Ripe fruits are absolute necessities to the people. Their acids and sugars render fruits in combination, perfect health and strength givers and provided their selection is based upon a knowledge of their qualities and virtues, they will readily tend to prolong life.

At the same time it should be remembered that good quality fruit is of the utmost importance. Fruit eating enables us to check the encroachment of death upon life, which comes through ossification of the tissues of the body and bones. The fruit juice cleanses the earthy matter from the tissues and in this way tends to prolong life. In the fruit garden man can be assured a perfect body and a perfect mind.

Properties of Oranges.



Oranges are considered very healthy fruit. They are exceedingly agreeable to most palates, they quench thirst, refresh the stomach, help to subdue fever and replace laxatives. They have acquired a reputation as a curative for several ills. In Paraguay, the natives regard the orange essence as a valuable medicinal ointment with extraordinary healing properties.

The nutritive value of the banana is about equal to the potato and of rice. They contain less water and more nitrogenous matter than most fresh fruits. As a medicine, it is said to dispel constipation in children and for adults has good effects in cases of acute indigestion. Bilious people are advised to eat the banana in the morning.

The Strawberry.

Strawberries are very healthy, digestible and refreshing and may safely be eaten in quantity. They are considered the mildest of all the cultivated fruits, are very cooling and wholesome with laxative qualities. The juice of the strawberry is a good natural preparation for the cleansing of the teeth. Strawberries contain only very small proportions of citric acids.

The raspberry and blackberry belong to the sub-acid class of fruits. The raspberry loses its freshness and becomes mouldy sooner than others, but as a food, it is second to none, containing a good portion of sugar. From them is made a vinegar that is a particularly cooling and refreshing beverage in fevers and hot weather and which is regarded as a very valuable medicine.

June Windows—Suggestions as to Scope

Show Window Becoming More Widely Recognized as a Selling Power—Customer Judges Store by Appearance of Window—Demand Increases With Warmer Weather for Goods That Can be Quickly Prepared—Preserving Time and its Possibilities.

THE selling value of the show window is becoming more generally recognized in all lines of business. Especially is this so in the food trade. Through it, the merchant can appeal to the public's appetite in a manner that will mean more business for him. It has been demonstrated time and again that it is one of the most valuable assets the merchant has.

"Take away my windows and you take away my business," said a merchant on one of Toronto's main streets recently to The Grocer.

"I depend on the amount of goods sold through the window to pay my rent, and it is only through them that I am able to make my business pay. I can trace the source of many of my best customers to my windows and that is the reason that they are so valuable to me."

Some the Other Way.

Still there are those who do not fully recognize the enormous advantages to be reaped from the window, or, if they are aware of the fact, they do not take advantage of it, so as to benefit themselves. This is shown by the poorly-dressed windows which are still found in many stores. There are those merchants who seem to be entirely satisfied if they have their windows filled with goods, regardless of their salesmanship power. This should not be and the wise merchant is beginning to fully recognize the fact.

The customer generally judges the store to a large extent by the appearance of its window and for this reason if no other, it behooves the merchant to give such attention to his window that its appearance will favorably impress customers.

First of Summer.

June, the first month of summer, so the family almanac tells us, is near at hand. It is an excellent month for the merchant to put forth special efforts and take full advantage of the possibilities which his window affords. It is a season of the year at which the window may be made particularly attractive and as during this month the weather is of such a nature that the streets are frequented a great deal, the direct benefits to be secured by giving special attention at this time are very great and the grocer should already be making plans that those benefits may be as great as possible.

With the approach of the warmer weather, the demand increases for those lines with which meals may be prepared in the shortest time and with the least amount of labor. Now is the time for the merchant to seize the opportunity presented for building up a good trade during the summer months for such articles, for the merchant who interests customers in these lines early in the season will receive a large share of the business during the remaining portion of the season. And in this respect the show window may be used to good advantage.

A Suggestion.

A suggestion for such a window might be the arrangement of three steps on which these articles could be arranged. On the bottom one could be placed pickles and olives. On the second one, on one side canned vegetables, and on the other canned soups, while on the top one show three or four kinds of canned meats. Topping this a card with some suitable inscription, such as: "We solve the problem of summer meals at least expense and trouble."

Cooked ham enjoys a good summer sale and can either be shown with the canned meats or a show card presented, informing customers that you carry it.

An Attractive Display.

Last year a store had a very attractive window display, which was headed: "Suggestions for every meal." This window also had the step idea brought into use. On the bottom one, which was headed "breakfast," was shown several lines of breakfast foods, camp coffee, and in the centre a pyramid of oranges. The one headed "dinner" contained canned soups, cooked ham, canned vegetables, pickles, pie filling and quick tapioca, and thus covering the whole meal. The "supper" step had canned meats, olives, cheese, canned fruits and fancy biscuits.

The Midnight Lunch.

The window in question (the idea can be followed or not according to the trimmer's notions) had far above all, a shelf with a card, "The midnight lunch," which contained crackers, cheese, sardines, lobsters, pork and beans and pickles.

Other ideas will present themselves to the trimmer, but the idea is to impress the customer that you have goods that will allow them to prepare meals quickly and at no great cost. Another idea is to show different lines in the display and in the centre have a clock set at 5 minutes to six, and a show card: "Prepare a meal with these goods in 5 minutes."

Of course, June is remembered as the month of many marriages, and the idea of a June Bride window will at once suggest itself to the trimmer. Numerous new homes are being established during this month throughout the country, and the merchant should make a bid for their patronage. Personal application is a good method, but a good window, bringing out the idea, will not only attract those who have recently taken the important step, but will create general interest. In this way many ideas can be worked out, first to create interest in the window, and secondly to sell goods.

The Preserving Season.

The appearance of a table in the window set for two, and the addition of hearts, flowers, wedding bells, bridal arch or any other appropriate setting will first create interest, and then have some neat displays, but not too many to carry out the real intention of the window, and that is to sell goods. Some inscription bearing on the window should also be shown.

June finds the preserving season getting well under way, as home grown strawberries begin to arrive in large quantities, and, of course, this suggests three items to the grocer's mind, namely, fruit, sugar and sealers. Some very good windows combining these three articles can be made by the grocer. We give a suggestion for a display along this line. In the background, raised about three feet above the window floor, is a shelf covered with sealers, the front ones, if at all possible, filled with preserved fruit, thus giving the idea that they are all filled. In front of this, in the centre, is placed a couple of crates of fresh berries, with a card, "Good, solid fruit." On one side is a pyramid of sealers with a card, "Air tight jars," while on the other side is a pile of loose sugar with a card, "The best sugar." At the front of the window is an inscription, "A good combination," while above the shelf a show card, "A shelf of good fruit is the housewife's pride."

THINGS THAT SHOULD NOT BE.

Sitting around on the counter, discussing matters with people who come to loaf and not to buy.

Advocating a customer to buy an article because it is cheaper than another.

Yawning and stretching while a customer is giving an order.

Nova Scotia Ships Lobsters to States

Record Shipment of Season—American Markets Offer More Attractive Prices—Lobster Canneries on East Coast Now in Full Operation—Steady Arrival of Fresh Fish.

Fresh fish are arriving steadily and are meeting with a good demand. Speaking in general terms the supply is rather liberal in the prominent lines and prices are quite reasonable. Dealers report that not only is the demand steady for fresh lines, but that smoked fish are still moving satisfactorily. New fillets and haddies are arriving regularly and are going into consumption.

All parts of the country are taking them up, especially the West, where the growing population has created a big fish trade. Haddock and cod are plentiful, and prices are quoted lower. Whitefish and trout are in good demand. Business, on the whole, is quite satisfactory.

Nova Scotia last week sent a record shipment of lobsters to the American markets where better prices are obtained. Good catches are reported from the north shore of Prince Edward Island, and the factories are now in full operation. Fresh fish are reported less plentiful at Halifax. Plentiful supplies of halibut are reported at British Columbia with a steady demand.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—The fish market continues fairly active, halibut, haddock and cod are in good supply, and quotations on the latter two varieties are lower. Dressed perch and bullheads are arriving freely, as are also alewives. Brook trout are still scarce. Whitefish and lake trout are arriving steadily, and are in good demand.

There is still enquiry for frozen fish.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Nova Scotia this week sent a record shipment of lobsters to the Boston market. The steamer Boston taking from Farmouth on Wednesday, 1,604 crates, of a live quality. On the local markets only small lobsters are offered, and they are quoted this week at $1.50 per dozen. Reports reaching here from the north shore of Prince Edward Island are encouraging. Some large catches of lobsters are being made, the boats landing from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds each, daily. The weather conditions have not been favorable for fishing on the Island shore, but the prospects are that the season's catch will be large. The lobsters are large and well filled, and are exceptionally good for the canneries. All the factories are now running on full time.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, May 18.—One of the largest catches of halibut for some time was brought in last week. There is a good demand for this fish. Those who taste halibut off the ice and when fresh out of the water declare there is a great difference in the flavor and firmness, the packing in the ice, while keeping the fish good, does not keep it hard.

An oyster company which has beds at Boundary Bay, brought in this week a shipment of 1,200 sacks of seed oysters from Worcester, Mass. In all 34 carloads of seed oysters have been brought out this season by various companies operating in the vicinity of Boundary Bay. This business was started less than ten years ago and has expanded rapidly.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Supplies of fish on this market are quite plentiful and demand is of a steady nature and quite satisfactory in volume. Fresh varieties are coming in for a large portion of the trade, with frozen fish also receiving their share of attention. Prices are unchanged this week.

NEWFOUNLAND.

St. John's.—The weather has been splendid for drying fish during the past week and quite a large quantity was prepared for export. The price of cod oil still keeps the same as since last fall, namely, $110 per tun, with a fair demand being experienced. NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Dried codfish has slumped fifty cents per hundred pounds, and will probably go down still more in the near future. Haddock and cod are still very scarce, but remain at the same price. Lobsters are not on hand in very great quantities, although slightly more plentiful than was the case last week.

A Fish Known Under Score of Names

A Short History of the Notorious Catfish—A Probable Conjecture as to Why it is so Named—Its Great Weight in Mississippi River—How it is Caught and How Prepared for Market.

Written specially for Canadian Grocer by J. A. Paulhus, Montreal.

The catfish lives and thrives on the North American continent in all the rivers, lakes and pools, extending from the Rockies to the Atlantic seaboard. Some specimen are even found in quantities south, in the bayous formed by the gulf of Mexico, and the delta of the Mississipi.

This specie of fish is known under a score of names, according to the localities and waters in which it is found. Amongst the different denominations, the most popular are bullheads, bullpouts, horned pouts, borbottes, borbues, basham, etc. One of the Mississipi—CATS—will often tip the scale at 150 to 175 lbs. weight, and even more. At the market, this fish is sliced in steaks and sold the same fashion as is done with the halibut.

Some rivers in southern latitudes like the St. John's in Florida, the Potomac and other streams emptying in Chesapeake Bay yield large catfish weighing 50 to 60 pounds each, though the average weight would run from 8 to 10 pounds each for the largest species and 2 to 3 pounds for the smallest ones.

Smaller in Canada.

In this country, the catfish does not grow to such a size, the largest type averaging 8 to 10 pounds and the smallest 1 to 2 pounds. But what is better the flavor of our—CATS—due to climatic conditions, and cooler water is superior to the fish caught in southern regions and for this reason, are always the favorite in the different markets where they are offered.

Why Cat Fish.

Why this fish has been so called is purely a matter of conjecture. We can understand the meaning of parrot fish, hog fish, sunfish, etc. There are certain resemblances, or similarity either in the form, shape or habits between the bird which is called parrot and the fish of the same name. The sun fish has the form of the sun, the hog fish has a grunt which reminds one of the hog.

But the catfish has nothing which would suggest such a name. There are no two things in creation so widely different in every point as the animal cat and the fish cat.

The Cats Like it.

But it is known cats are in general very fond of the fish flesh, though no fish will tickle their fancy as much as the catfish, and this would perhaps explain in a way the origin of the name due to this taste of the cats for the catfish.

If it is so, cats are certainly poor anglers, though they are clever hunters. A cat will climb up a tree, watch silently for hours, like a statue, motionless, in the hope of catching a bird, a winged thing with power to escape the talons and the cruel set teeth of the smooth pussey. Nevertheless cats destroy lots of birds. A cat will take the chance at the peril of his life to fight vigorous and vicious rats with the disadvantage of cramped space under decayed floors or soiled drains. Still at the cost of blood and wounds, they exterminate vermin.

Fish Easy Prey.

It would be so easy for them, it seems, to go under cover of darkness, which is light for their eyes, and gather along the quiet streams at night all the ambroisie for which they have such a craving, because catfish on peaceful evenings roam about in quantities near the shores in quest of food themselves. They would be an easy prey to the alertness of the feline race. No doubt nature in its profound wisdom has ordered it to be so, but all the same cats are indeed poor fisher folk.

When to Fish.

Fishing catfish with a line and rod is a very enjoyable sport. It does not require intricate tackle. The catfish is not a game fish in the sportman's sense of the word. It will not rise to the tempting colors of a—Jock Scott—fly, but on a cool, early summer day, when the wild cherry trees are all in blossom, the green grass soft and thick, the fields dotted with the white and yellow tints of daisies and buttercups, the air sweet, balmy and resonant with the ringing voice of the Bobolink, there is charm to watch the float of the line tossing, plunging in a still pool. It is a seduction to tantalize the voracious appetite of the catfish, with a well baited hook, when he is hungry, as they move in shoals, when the angler is lucky enough to throw his line in the proper spot, he is always sure of a big haul. A detail to note. Catfish never bite when the wind blows from the east. It is an omnivorous feeder—worms, flies, flesh, insects, vegetables, plants, are his everyday bill of fare and in time of famine, like Saturn of mythology, he will devour his own children.

Crows Like Rooster.

When landed, the difficulty is to unhook him, its dorsal skin always erected, is a dangerous weapon and always inflicts painful wounds to the untrained or unprotected hand—and often occasion blood poisoning. It also, at the moment of being pulled out of water makes a peculiar noise which imitates almost to perfection the crow of a rooster when some of his hens are alarmed by the flying of a crow nearby.

Canadian Species.

In Canada the catfish is of two well characterized species; both have the same form and shape except that the barbues, the largest type, has a tapering head and a forked tail. The borbottes, the small type, has a broad, flat head, and a cut square tail. Both inhabit the same waters. The weight of the borbues is from 6 to 10 pounds and the borbottes average 1 to 2 pounds.

Early in the spring they follow the waters submerging the fields to bask in the sunshine and to feed abundantly upon the debutus left by the melting of ice and snow. As soon as water recedes they return to the shallow depths of streams and start the work of propagation.

Soon after, masses of a gelatinous substance dotted with innumerable black specks, the eggs, are seen floating and maturing through the action of water and sun.

Mothering the Fish.

When hatching time is past a female catfish may be seen near the shores, with a schoal of young ones, which she nurses and feeds much the same fashion as a hen does with her chicks. The growth of the catfish is very rapid. The adult stage is attained in about 3 years' time.

Being protected with dangerous fins, principally the dorsal, the catfish can swim about in safety into the watery depths without fear of deadly attacks from enemies, if we except the pike, and this shark of inland waters is severely punished when his voracious appetite urges him to attack indiscriminately any fish that comes in the radius of his eyesight. It means sure death for him. The prongs or fins of the catfish like pieces of tempered steel cut through his throat or stomach and send him floating on the surface of the stream, a dead body to be preyed upon by the aquatic birds.

Depredatory Instincts.

The borbottes have very depredatory instincts. They are considered a pest in the lakes where trout is reared. Not because they will attack and kill that fish, but simply because they will destroy hatcheries—as they are very fond to feed on the eggs laid by other fish.

The flesh of the catfish is of a fine texture and good flavor—something between the eel and the sturgeon. When it is caught in cool, clear waters and well cooked, it is a delicious morsel. Somebody has said that catfish is like—pate de foie gras—one likes it readily or detests it for ever.

Lives Out of Water.

For trade purposes, catfish is caught with traps or nets. The fisherman empties the contents of his daily catches in a big basin and keep the fish alive until market day is at hand. The catfish is very tenacious of life and will live out of its proper elements for hours and even days if kept covered with green grass. For marketing the fisherman decapitates the fish, peels the skin, removes the entrails and places the product in a cool place.

The Marketing.

This process stops the flow of blood and bring on that deep purple color so appreciated by the connoisseurs. For shipping, the fish is placed in neat boxes between layers of ferns or large tree leaves. No ice is used. The price of dressed borbottes ranges from 6 to 10 cents a pound and sometimes run as high as 15c a pound. All the rivers emptying into the St. Lawrence yield annually tons of dressed bullheads. Lake St. Peter district, Lake St. Louis, Lake St. Francis, Chateauguay river, Richelieu river are noted for the excellence and good qualities of the catfish they produce. Catfishing is a big assets for the inhabitants of these localities, and is worth at least $100,000 a season. Unfortunately of late the crops have been reduced considerably due to overfishing. Unless some means of protection are resorted to, the day is not far when dressed bullheads, like shad once so plentiful, will be a luxury to be enjoyed only in the first class hotels and cafes, by the wealthy or multimillionaire class.

SOME LITTLE HINTS.

When you announce a special sale for a certain length of time, hold it for that length of time, and then stop it, unless you have a reason for continuing it that will seem good to the public.

Be sure that there are no nails, projecting from any barrels or boxes in your store to tear a customer's clothes.

If a mis-statement of price should happen to occur in your advertisement, it is best to live up to it, unless it would cause you a loss you positively cannot afford.

BAD LOBSTER SEASON.

Nova Soctian Fishermen Lose Much on Account of Storms.

The lobster fishermen of Nova Scotia, have had a hard time of it during the season just closed, and yet there are some bright features. In the number of lobsters caught this has been the smallest season lor many years, yet the revenue receipts will average up with last year, as from the beginning of the season, on December 15, the price has been unusually high, and will average about $22 or $23 per crate, as against not over $18 or $19 for previous years.

It has been a very hard year on account of loss of traps through frequent and distructive storms, several of which destroyed thousands of traps and gear, meaning many thousands of dollars to the fishermen. Taking this loss in connection with the reduced catch, notwithstanding the high prices, the season, on the whole, has been a bad one, probably the worst for many years. The canneries have practically done nothing, owing to the scarcity of the lobster and the high prices, and thus far the amount canned in this district is not one-half what it was one year ago at the same date. Canners are somewhat disturbed about the matter, as many have booked orders which it will be difficult to fill.

Selling Tobacco as Grocery Side Line

Desirable That a Man Be Located in Factory District, and Necessary That Goods Must be in Good Condition—Necessity of Attracting Men to Store—Excellent for Other Business.

A TOBACCO department has proved a money-maker to many a grocer. Others, largely on account of the location of their stores, have doubtless deemed it unadvisable to carry tobacco in stock.

An uptown grocer with barber shops and tobacco stores on all sides may well have some doubts as to his tobacco line ever becoming much of a success.

In every town and city throughout the Dominion will be found grocers of this kind. But on the other hand there are grocers who do a considerable business in tobacco and who find their general trade assisted by this sideline.

Getting Men Interested.

It is a well known fact that men are for the most part infrequent visitors to the grocery store. The grocer's dealings are with the woman of the house. It is probably regrettable in one sense that men are absentees for they are more lavish as a rule than women. Thus, if men could be brought more and more into the grocery store it would not be long until their purchases would extend beyond tobaccos. The writer knows of instances where men who came to buy a plug or package of smoking tobacco was attracted to cheese, apples and such lines and asked to have them sent home.

Some Essentials.

The grocer in a factory district and any of the trade away from the opposition of the tobacco stores is likely to make a success of this department. He does not need to lay in a heavy stock and a single show case is generally sufficient to display it. It is highly important that his goods are not allowed to become dry. The air in the show case should be kept moist which may be accomplished by putting in the case one or two tumblers of water, or some such arrangement. As to the stock one is to carry that depends upon the individual. With plug tobacco it does not lend itself very well to the show case idea unless it is roomy enough. It is also important that the plug tobacco should not be allowed to become dry. Nothing will turn away a smoker more quickly than dry and apparently old tobacco.

Be in Prominent Place.

This display should be in a prominent place. It requires little or no attention and can easily be made attractive. The grocer must govern himself according to the law covering the selling of tobaccos and the handling of them. Tobaccos present but little trouble to the grocer, there is always a steady demand for them and they are profitable. These points may be cited as reasons why the grocer should carry tobacco provided he considers he is in a fair locality. Some of the trade, ultraconscientious they may be, refuse to handle tobacco for particular reasons, but they are not very numerous.

This is an excellent time for the grocer to push sales of confectionery. The demand brightens at this time while the temperature is such that stocks can be handled without difficulty.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

Prescott & Co., of Manchester, Eng., who advertise their Rice Starch in this issue, have an article to offer the trade of unusual merit. Their Negress Brand Guaranteed Pure Rice Starch is celebrated for its whiteness and purity, and for the beautiful gloss it imparts to linen. Their new Negress Brand Cream Starch is a novelty. It is the fashionable shade for curtains which will not fade in the strong sunlight when starched with it. Prescott & Co. are modern in their methods and supply packages suitable for all markets. They will supply customers' own brands for large importers and will send samples and prices on request. The factory in which this Rice Starch is manufactured is situated in Belgium, having been founded in 1867.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Ltd., of Montreal, are announcing several lines of merchandise to be bought now for immediate delivery at special prices. Inasmuch as all these goods are leaders, the response to this offer should be prompt and attractive. Laporte, Martin & Co., Ltd., are agents for many of the leading firms of the world, and the list of such firms published in another page will be decidedly interesting.

F. A. Verey, formerly Toronto representative of the Edwardsburg Starch Co., has taken over the East India Manufacturing Co., 44 Colborne Street, Toronto. This company manufactures grocery sundries. Mr. Verey's many friends among the wholesale and retail trade will be glad to hear that he has branched out into business for himself.

The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., Toronto and Montreal, draws your attention to their advertisement in this issue on Le Soleil canned goods from Belgium. See also to your stock of Flico, as the fly season is rapidly approaching. Those dealers who are handling the "Redio" polishing cloth are making money. There is no metal polish necessary when this cloth is used. They are selling everywhere. Since the camping season is almost here you should stock Knorr's soup squares, dried vegetables and sliced potatoes. These are some of the best selling lines on the market for campers' and prospectors' trade. This company has received first shipment of English Stilton cheese. Replenish your stocks early. These are some exceptional opportunities for you.

So rapidly has the business of Wagstaffe Limited, Hamilton, Ont., been advancing that it has been found necessary to increase their already extensive manufacturing establishment again. Preparations are under way to make it a hundred and fifty per cent larger than at present, This is a splendid tribute to the ability of Mr. Wagstaffe, founder of the business.

There is a new fly poison on the market, known as Wonderful Fly Killer. It is simply contrived, being apparently only a small round pan covered by a perforated concave top. Under this cover is the poison, which gets in its work when water is poured over it. As will be observed from advertisement in this issue, the Crystal Sealing Co., 204 Stair building, Toronto, are the Dominion agents.

Meakins & Sons, Hamilton, Ont., have a splendid seller to offer the trade in their sanitary glass washboard. Their advertisement in this issue gives particulars.

NEWFOUNDLAND NOTES.

Budget of Interesting News and Market Facts.

St. John's, Newfoundland, May 18.—Trade conditions are beginning to brighten, and dealers generally are looking forward to a good spring's trade. With opening of navigation and our steamers starting to run on the different bays, matters are getting a bit lively. Supplying and outfitting for the season's fishery will make business good for a few weeks.

A few cargoes of produce left over from last season, on account of bad weather, have come along lately and commanded good prices. The outlook for good prices this season is promising.

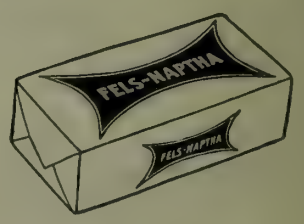
The spring herring fishery is away behind last season, and at present, the market is bare. Last year this time, considerable stocks were held. New arrivals are expected daily and owing to the scarcity, will command good prices.

Owing to the shortage of the salmon pack last season, the market is about exhausted. Cod oil still maintains a record figure, and $110 per ton, is freely given at present.

The sealing voyage for 1911 is closed, and the result is gratifying. With one or two exceptions, the steamers had good paying trips. The total catch will be about 300,000, estimated value five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000).

We had seven or eight arrivals last week with molasses, and the market is now well supplied with this commodity. Price will be about the same as last year.

The winter fishery on the West Coast has been fairly successful, and if weather conditions are favorable, some cargoes will soon be ready for market.



Tea merchants report a decline in prices, but the impression is that an advance will shortly take place. Most of our requirements are provided for, and and prices won't affect the trade unless they hold down for some considerable time. Our importation last year was 1,250,000 lbs.—about 5 lbs. per head of the population.

Several agents for Canadian firms are now in town, and look as if business was prospering with them.

The directions on the

wrapper should be carefully observed by your customers. It will really repay women to read and follow them. When so used, Fels - Naptha Soap does everything claimed for it.

EVER CONSIDER

If you entered a horse race and drove a pacer that was even ever so little a better animal than any other of the field, your chances of winning would be greater than those of your competitors.

You see, YOU would have a HANDICAP.

THE SELLING OF

Now, in selling Laundry Soap, the man who gives the best value—other things being equal—is the one who has the handicap, the one who will win the race. People will return to his store because they can save money by doing so.

LAUNDRY SOAP AS

Every horse in a race is not the best. If that were the case you would never make a dollar at the track. Nor is every Laundry Soap on the market the best. Horses and soap---you have to discover the winners. And when you find the best you are likely to profit by your knowledge.

SOMETHING LIKE

We don't want you to take OUR lonely word that "CANADA'S BEST" Laundry Soap is the most profitable Laundry Soap for you to sell---though WE know it is, as do thousands of grocers who now sell it. BUT, we do ask you, in all fairness to yourself, to give it a trial, and to abide by the decision you will make on hearing your customers' verdict.

A HORSE RACE?

Then, if it is the best——hadn't you better have the advantage (the handicap) that is yours when you are selling "CANADA'S BEST" Laundry Soap?

Merchants Talk About Book-keeping

Dealers From All Parts of Canada Who Have Sent in Their Meed of Praise in Connection With the Benefits to be Derived From the Instalation of a Credit Register System.

Defective and laborious methods of bookkeeping are the sources of a great deal of loss in many business establishments. Any method that will tend to eliminate any loss and curtail the work in connection with the store's book-keeping is welcomed with open arms by the merchant.

Many systems and equipments designed to facilitate book-keeping have been offered to merchants in recent years. Among those that have met with a favorable reception is the account or credit register book-keeping machine. The effect on the business and the amount of work employed are the two points on which any method or system introduced into the store should be judged. It is claimed by those merchants who have them in use that they work to the advantage of the store in eliminating defective book-keeping for one thing and also in making the handling of accounts much easier.

In Nova Scotia.

A. A. Shortliffe, grocer of Digby, N.S., is one dealer who has installed a book-keeping machine and is well satisfied with his investment. He purchased it last July, it has given excellent satisfaction, and he would not now care to do a credit business without it. He says that if he could not purchase another, he would not sell his present machine for five times it's cost. With it, mistakes are not nearly so liable to occur, while forgotten charges are a thing of the past.

He says that in three months after installing his outstanding accounts were reduced fully 25 per cent. His cus-customers like the idea of knowing what they owe, while he likes to have them know that he knows what they owe. He says that the price is soon forgotten as it pays for itself in many ways.

Praise From Alberta.

From the other end of the Dominion, L. O. Wisler, of Stettler, Alta., sends out his praise of a similar system. "On March 10, 1910," he writes, "I installed the system in my store, after listening to much criticism among the business men of this town. I can say now that I have convinced a large majority of these same men that this system is the best automatic collector of accounts, for the reason that the total indebtedness of each customer is presented to him at each purchase. I have also persuaded them that it is a great time and labor saver on posting accounts and sending out statements, and it also enables one to master his accounts with the least time, least trouble and the utmost exactness of any system under the sun. I would not think of doing business without it."

What Winnipeg Men Say.

Booth & Colquhoun, of Winnipeg, Man., in speaking of this style of time-saver, said: "We have had the system installed for some time now and like it much. It saves us all book-keeping and we have found it a better collector than our old system. Customers often pay up to date now instead of at the end of the month. It also stops any disputes which might arise over lost slips, etc., and we can tell in a second what any of our customers owe us, to a cent. We consider it the best investment we ever made in the line of store equipment."

What Others Say.

John Small, of Huntingdon, Que., is another merchant who has had the system in his store for a considerable length of time and who finds it much superior to anything in the book-keeping line he has ever had and would not now be without it.

The Bow, Marsh Grocery Co., of Calgary, Alta., say: "We installed an account system in 1909, and will say for the benefit of our brother merchants, that it is the only system. There is no copying, no posting, statements, or night work and our customers like it, for they know just what they owe in full with each purchase, and there are no disputes. One of the great features is: if the customer makes twenty purchases a month they receive twenty statements with no extra time or expense. Believe me, it is an automatic collector of accounts and holds credits within a limit."

White & Tweedie, general merchants, Centreville, N.B., like a system because it saves a lot of bother and all disputes and keeps a customer posted about the amount of his account. The time that it saves in making out bills also appeals to them.

The Economy of Tying Parcels Well is Apparent

Clerks should take a great deal of care in wrapping up parcels so that they may be carried home by customers without annoyance. You will find that even such a small thing as this is appreciated and that it adding to the service of the store. This is an important factor in the holding of trade.

In country stores, parcels should be tied so that the farmer may get them home without breakage, for if a parcel breaks open and a quantity of the contents is lost, it all counts against the store. Customers have a habit of carrying medium weight articles such as bread by the string and a single knot will not stand the strain. Clerks should remember to tie it up securely, for if the parcel should happen to come untied on the street, a bad opinion of your store will probably be formed and some place else where parcels are wrapped better will get the business.

Sometimes a merchant, through false economy, will use a bag that is too light with the result that it breaks witk the slightest jar or shake. Judgment should be used in the selection of bags that no heavier weight than needful is used, but in most cases it is best to be on the safe side and use a bag that is at least heavy enough. That customers appreciate this can be gathered from what a customer recently said in regard to the question:—

"I buy fruit to carry home; I've done that for—well, a good many years, and for a long time I bought around in various places. Then one day some years ago I stopped at a store where I liked the looks of the fruit and where, as I noticed a moment later, bags were a little heavier than those I had been accustomed to find. The bags here cost the dealer more, maybe a quarter or a half cent more apiece; but I liked the looks of them. They were good stout bags that wouldn't break on the way home.

"And when this dealer had put the fruit in one of these bags he didn't simply twist the neck of it and hand it over to me so in a form inconvenient to carry. He folded the top of the bag over and rolled it down to form a handle—a grip piece; and then he tied this bundle around securely with twine, thus making it up altogether into a bundle that was secure and handy to carry.

"Of course I liked all that, and I found that he always did up his packages so or putting on sometimes a wood and wire handle; but always he made the package secure and handy for me. He had some thought for me, and I've been buying of him ever since; and if he should move I'd follow him. I would go out of my way to trade with him."

R. L. Shaw, M.L.A., has bought out C. Nichols' interest in the firm of Nichols & Dillon, general merchants, Castor, Alta. The firm will be known as Dillon & Shaw.

These Machines have now been on the market a few years, and need only to be seen at work to prove their superiority over all others, and any Machines that I have made can be fitted with my NEW AUTOMATIC FEEDING APPARATUS, into which you can empty the boxes of Currants or Sultanas (as imported); then the fruit need not be touched, as the motion will not only break the lumps without crushing but feed regularly into the Machine. This apparatus practically saves one person's labour by allowing the attendant time to open boxes of fruit and take away the cleaned while the Machine is running

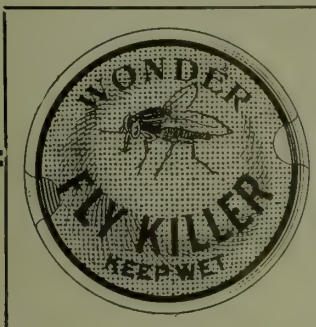
Lobsters and Kippered Herring

There's a difference in the taste of ICE CASTLE BRAND goods which distinguish them from every other similar line.

The difference results from the better quality of Lobsters and Kippered Herring used for the ICE CASTLE BRAND. The greatest care is taken in factory conditions and surroundings where these goods are packed.



The difference is decided enough to make your trade ask for ICE CASTLE BRAND goods. They are attractively packed, making a good display for window or shelf. The margin of profit is handsome.

Talking to the Point

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

Spices, and How to Know Them

By W. M. GIBBS

The only book on the subject—just published. The merchant or salesman, who knows all about spices, can command the spice trade in his territory. To get this information, he should read this work, dealing with PREPARATION, USE and ADULTERATION OF SPICES—a chapter devoted to each spice.

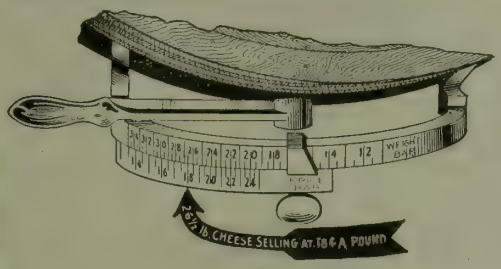
NO GUESS WORK



It is not easy to cut exactly the amount of cheese your customer orders. You oftentimes cut more than the order requires, and let it go. More often the small piece is left to dry up and waste; either way you are losing on your cheese sales. The loss is going to continue as long as you cut cheese by guesswork.

The Perfection Cheese Cutter can be depended upon to cut just exactly the amount required, eliminating all loss of cheese by guesswork.

Standard Automatic Cabinet---A handsome glass and wood cabinet, highly polished, very practical, adding greatly to the appearance of the store.

MEASURES EXACTLY

No Figuring Required

All you have to do is to set the price, mark on one scale opposite the weight on the other, turn the thumb screw and it is ready for business.

The Perfection Cheese Cutter is well made, of the best material, will last a lifetime. The unusual price we ask for such a fixture will surprise you. Send for Particulars is the meaning of this "No Alum" cry? Certain Baking Powder manufacturers continually tell you that their powder contains no alum, inferring that this ingredient, which is by no means injurious, is used in all other Brands.

Ocean Mill Baking Powder

has no alum either, and is cheaper than, and the equal of, the best.

We Give You a Guarantee of Quality,

Mr. Grocer, and want to drive home to you that we have a good proposition and one which you can handle profitably.

VALUABLE PREMIUM COUPONS are enclosed in each package, entitling the purchaser to glassware, cooking utensils, etc. Tell your customers about these and you are sure of a big business. Write for Further Particulars.

"Crown Brand" CORN SYRUP

made an extensive increase last year. This increase was due to three causes:

FIRST, Extensive advertising the bill-boards from coast to coast are telling the people about "Crown Brand."

SECOND, the quality of "Crown Brand"—the user who once tries it comes back for more.

THIRD, (and by no means least important) the grocer's margin of profit in "Crown Brand" is all it should be.

Your individual sales should have been more. Were they? Let people know you're selling "Crown Brand" Corn Syrup; GET YOUR SHARE.

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S
Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

Don't get an "Ice Box."

The damp, musty, stagnant air "Ice Box" is a breeding place for germs and disease, and the average refrigerator is merely an elaborate Ice Box.

We have been twenty-five years exclusively manufacturing refrigerators, and our present models have all our knowledge and experience worked into them.

A Great Selling Team

¶ Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

¶ They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action—to closing.

¶ Good salesmen and good trade-paper advertising make a great team to carry the buyer through these several stages to the buying point. Alone, the salesman is at a disadvantage.

The Trolley System and Grocery Store

A Comparison Between the Well-run Local Traction Concern for a Five-cent Charge, and the Good Grocery Store—The Clerk Who is an Extravagant Luxury —Taking of Extra Profits Concerning the Customer Who Selects Her Own Goods and Demands Always the Very Best.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

We are all wont to regard a street railway organization as a wonder of performance. Surely, it is remarkable to note what can be done for a nickel. Here is laid the finest track, solid, well-ballasted, absolutely true, and balanced wonderfully well when one considers the exigencies of street levels, necessarily flat curves and other difficulties. Here is supplied cars of best construction, driven and heated by electricity, equipped with electric signal bells, controlled by air brakes. All this is legally controlled in a way which, speaking offhand, would seem to preclude profitable operation, yet profits are so liberal that municipalities are constantly devising ways and means of sharing in the income.

Let Grocer Think.

But wherein does the well-conducted store fall short in any of those particulars? Do we often realize how very much we succeed in accomplishing; and do we not fail to realize where and how we fail to get what is coming to us through careless figuring, or "taking a chance" with our profits?

Take a telephone order for three grapefruit for 25c. Here, to begin with, we supply the telephone and the grapefruit. We supply a store with the stock, a clerk to take the order, other clerks to put up the goods, a checker to see that the order is properly put up, delivery service equipped in every detail, and office service to carry the account; finally, the capital, experience and enterprise to do the business. And what do we get as gross revenue for all this? From 3 1-3 to about 5 1-5 cents. Astonishing as the street car, is it not?

Just Figuring.

Now, the point is, that on 3 1-3 cents we just about "play even," and on 5 1-5 cents we make a profit for ourselves. Obviously, great care in checking and figuring is necessary, or our margin will be on the minus side. Let us analyze a bit.

A box of 64 grapefruit of the best variety costs $4, and the delivery cost averages fully 25c. If we sell 64, the cost of 3 is within a shade of 19.81c. But we seldom sell 64, nor should we ever figure on 64. It is only safe to figure on 60; and on that basis our cost is 21 1-3c. In the first instance, we make 20 per cent. plus; in the second, we make 12 per cent. minus. Let us say that Johnson & Son are not selling this fruit at 3 for 25c. Our price is 10c straight. And on that basis, figuring 60, we make a shade under 25 per cent., while if we ever do get 64 out of a box, we are making 33½ per cent.

It does not do to allow "competition" to scare you out of your profits. Note the quotation marks, which are put there purposely for the reason that most alleged competition is in our imagination when we come to fine figures. It is not true competition that the other fellow sells a 64-grapefruit at 3 for 25c; chances are ten to one that he has no such grapefruit as I describe. He is dealing in an inferior article, very likely; and that puts him out of competition. If we are careful of our qualities and rigid in our inside requirements regarding efficient service, we can get our profits all right enough, and if we are not thus rigid, we have no business to succeed; hence, there is no excuse to do business without adequate compensation. You, who pay less than I do for 64 grapefruit, can think this over very carefully, and, "believe me," my quality will win against your price every time.

* * * * * *

An Extravagant Luxury.

A good clerk will not cost his employer a cent, while a moderately efficient one will cost his wages and then another equal sum, and a really poor clerk is about the most extravagant luxury a man can have around. I talk this to every new man I engage. All see the point—apparently; and all are confident that "they belong," but the true ones are few and far between. Yet it is all about the simplest thing in the world. Its very simplicity may be its trouble. The whole secret is, that the good clerk will work for the employer, while the poor clerk works for the customer. Of course, we might add that the good clerk uses his brains—but that goes without saying; nor need it be especially emphasized since, as stated above, the whole thing is elementary in its simplicity.

An Apple Sale.

For example. Apples which can be purchased in the fall at $3 per barrel are now worth $12 to $13 or more. A short time ago, with apples selling at 10c a pound, I waited on a customer who carefully selected what weighed an ounce less than two pounds. Did I charge her 20c? Not so you could notice it. She paid me 24c. She had picked over not the topmost layer, but the top of the barrel—had she selected from the barrel newly opened, she would have paid me about 30c—and she had thus reduced the grade of all the other apples in the barrel and rendered it a heavy percentage less possible for us to please other exacting buyers with selections from that barrel. The bottom of it would sell at 6 or 7 cents a pound; the last would be "sent home" for "mother" to cook up and save!

Over-charge Fatal.

A clerk of the average kind, meaning what is known as fairly good, would have hesitated to charge the 20c; and one of those who like to have customers ask for him would have entered 19c as the proper charge. I was working for myself, and I charged enough. It will be noted, however, by all who are competent to note correctly, that I did not charge too much—which would have been, and always is, fatal.

Suppose, however, that in a busy store the clerk has a hand in putting up or aiding to fill as few as a hundred orders a day. If he works for the customer unduly to the tune of 2c on each order, he costs his pay and $2 per day. If, on the other hand, he works fairly and properly for the customer, but honestly and loyally for the employer, he will gain 2c on each of those orders. Then, if he is a $2-a-day man, he costs nothing whatever, and is properly due for a raise. Moreover, that kind of man never will cost a cent, no matter how much he is paid for, he will do a thousand things to make himself an investment instead of an expense.

Taking Extra Profit.

A customer comes in and decides to buy some asparagus at 25c a pound. After the order is noted, she turns and very sweetly picks up three or four of the nice, straight, fat stalks, saying: "May I pick out these for my order?" I reply that I shall give here those and will put them up myself. I do so—but she pays me 60c for the two pounds.

Another telephones her order and includes bananas. We are selling bananas—as you are—practically at cost; but such would not be the case if bananas were always handled with some good judgment. Our price is 20c per dozen; but this lady emphasized the fact that she wanted "your BEST" bananas. She got them; but the charge was 25c. Not one customer in twenty would object to such a charge; or, if they did, not one in twenty would object to paying that price when proper explanation was forthcoming. And we can all afford to yield the point to the one in twenty, taking our extra profit from the nineteen. While on the subject of bananas, I may point out that eleven fine bananas and one fairly good one will constitute a dozen if the right kind of clerk, or the proprietor, fills the order. Then the store will make some money on bananas.

All of which is part of the doctrine of efficiency in the grocery business; and all of which I should hesitate to write so plainly did I not know that I am talking to men who have discriminating judgment to "understand."

Let the Fruit Grower Know the Salesman

Queen City Retailer Discusses the Question of the Marketing of Fruits—Believes That if Grower and Commission Man Understood One Another There Would be Little Trouble — The Need of a City Exchange.

Some time ago The Toronto Daily Star ran a series of articles on "Why is Toronto Housekeeping So Dear?" This series created quite widespread interest, because the problem of living is no more peculiar to that city than to any other big centre. But the paper seemed to insinuate that the retailer was making too much profit for the service rendered the consumer, and also published interview after interview calculated to make of the commission men on the Toronto Fruit Exchange an all round bad lot. Here is what one Toronto dealer, who conducts a big store near the corner of Yonge and Bloor streets, has to say anent the question. Other merchants may find this commment by F. C. Higgins interesting. He is a figure that always has loomed big in the affairs of the retail grocer in Toronto, and enjoys a full measure of the confidence and respect of his fellow-dealers. He looks upon the question of marketing fruits from a new point of view, and in effect he believes the grower and the salesman on the Fruit Exchange do not understand one another. This is what he says:

An Automatic Removal.

"I believe that if some man could devise a system by which the producer could feel assured that he had got from his commission man all that he was entitled to, that a great deal of this discord now obtaining would be automatically removed."

Mr. Higgins also believes that the consumer is now getting his fruits just about as cheaply as he possibly can get them, and backs up his contention with the argument that the retailers are competing with one another about as vigorously as they are able, and that in addition the streets of the city are open to all the peddlers and market men imaginable, who carry the war right to the door of the customer.

"No, no!" Mr. Higgins said. "I know of no method by which the marketing of fruits or vegetables could be improved upon. The margin of price separating the fruit on the farm and the fruit on the table of the city consumer is large—sometimes as large as one hundred per cent., sometimes much less, but I know of no change that would help the situation in the smallest part."

Seems a Disgrace.

"I will say that, in my opinion, it seems a disgrace that the only fruit exchange in Toronto should be under the control of interested parties. Not," he added in qualification, "that I have been injured by them, or that any dealer in Toronto has been hurt by their being so, but I think such an exchange should be under the direct control of a commission, or some other body of disinterested persons. Still allowing for all this, in my opinion there must be the middleman between the producer and the retailer. It is the only logical way of doing business, and particularly does this apply to the fruit and vegetable business. This is making itself manifest to many of the market gardeners around Toronto today, for they are sticking more and more to their land, and are turning over their goods for sale to the retail grocer. These men are beginning to understand that they can make more working their ground than they can peddling goods on the streets. That goes to prove my point as to the middleman.

"The Star has only scratched about this question. It has urged that ideas should be submitted and all that, but it has not gone into details much. It has made some general charges, but I don't believe it has said anything that is not correct, or nearly so, except in one or two instances. But the insinuation has been made that the retailer was one of the factors in making the difference in percentage of cost between grower and consumer so high. Let us investigate the merits of this.

On a Basket of Peaches.

"In the smaller fruits I suppose The Star is justified in stating that the grower gets but fifty per cent. of the price which the consumer ultimately pays. It may be even less than that. But then these are small amounts, and the same amount of handling is necessary as is the case with larger fruits, where the margin of difference is not so marked.

"Let us suppose a basket of peaches, for instance. Suppose this is sold on the exchange for seventy-five cents. Out of that there must come probably 20 cents for commissions, express, cartage and so on. That means the grower gets back 55 cents. Well now, to continue: It goes to the retailer at 75 cents. He has, if he wants to remain in business, and not close out the day's fruit consignment at a loss, to figure on a profit of about 25 per cent. on the cost price. That will mean the consumer will have to pay about 95 cents for that basket of fruit. The retailer has to get his profit—is compelled to—because of the risk he runs of having the goods spoil on his hands. I don't know of any other item in that list of other charges against the grower that can be eliminated. It is a logical chain, as necessary as it possibly can be. And yet that is almost a doubling of price as paid the grower."

"How about the grower shipping in his own goods?"

Friends Sent in Fruit.

"It does not work out to advantage. Let me tell you why. I have a number of good friends in Grimsby, Ont., whom I have had in the past occasion to visit during the summer. These people, fruit growers, all told me they would like me to handle their fruit. I agreed. Well, they send along their fruit. And what is it I find?

"When it gets to me, I discover that the stuff they have sent on does not suit my class of trade at all, or else it is too ripe, or not ripe enough. It is just like the boys game, 'sight and unseen.' I've no fault to find with the people who sent the stuff, none at all, but they never could seem to send the stuff wanted on particular days. The result is the stuff is lost. I lose on the deal. I have a number of dissatisfied customers probably, and no one is pleased. And, anyway, to sell I've got to get in touch with the market.

The Other Side.

"Now take the other side of the medal. I go down to the fruit market, knowing perfectly well just what goods I want, and how much I want to pay. I see the goods on the floor, can tell just how ripe it is, and all about it. Which do you think is the better system? I think the exchange. The only thing about it that can be criticised, as I have said, is the fact that it is in the control of men who are interested. I doubt if any other body of men, even the representatives of the growers themselves, could transact business on a basis of less than ten per cent., and I also cannot see how any of the other charges can be eliminated.

"Now it may be that the proper thing to do would be for the city to provide a fruit and vegetable exchange somewhere central, say Bayside Park, where buildings could be erected to take care of all the men who would want to get into the business now or in the years to come. I have not the smallest doubt that in the course of a few years, these men would be making of such an exchange their permanent place of business. They would be there all the year round, instead of merely in the summer months. In that way, I think the present system might be bettered.

"But The Star is wrong if it says the consumer is being unduly preyed upon. There is not a link in the entire chain to be cut out. And as far as the retailer is concerned, there is the competition of all the stores in the city, besides that of the Italian fruit vendors and peddlers to keep the price down to a minimum.

"The grower does not, in my opinion, understand the commission man. He also seems to think that he should be making a profit out of a little plot of a few acres, with a small crop. The trouble with him is that he does not 'grow' himself. It would only be a little more expensive for many of these fruit producers if they doubled or trebled the size of their holdings. You never hear any outcry from the big growers. They apparently consider themselves as doing very well. If the average retail grocer made as much money in a year as he believes the fruit grower makes, he would have little cause to complain," Mr. Higgins concluded, with a smile.

To Close Saturday Night in Winnipeg

Talk Now Going Rounds of Merchants in Prairie Centre to Close all Retail Stores at Six O'Clock on That Evening — Also Some Want a Week of Holiday Intact During Summer.

Winnipeg, May 23.—The following item appeared in a recent issue of the Free Press:—

"There was a meeting of the Winnipeg Retail Grocers' Association held Tuesday night to discuss the advisability of a weekly half-holiday during July and August. The feeling seemed to be that a half-holiday should be set apart, but there was a diversity of view, as to what day should be taken, some desiring Wednesday afternoon, some Thursday afternoon, and others Saturday night, beginning at 6 o'clock. It was decided to circulate a petition amongst the city grocers before arriving at a decision, and in the meantime the merchants will have a chance to express their opinion."

It is difficult to ascertain what the result of the controversy will be owing to the diversity of opinions. Some few grocers are advocating a full week's holiday some time during the summer, thus dispensing with any other holidays during the year. This looks almost too ridiculous to receive serious consideration, but with some it is a serious suggestion.

It is believed, however, that the majority are in favor of having one afternoon each week off duty, and it is only a matter of deciding between Wednesday and Thursday. It should not be difficult to reach a decision on this, but some Winnipeg grocers are not prone to dissolve their individual ideas readily for the convenience of the majority.

The discussion regarding Saturday night closing is really another matter entirely, as it does not really belong to the half-holiday propog. ers are in favor of closing Saturday night all the year round, and independent of the half-holiday campaign the Saturday night closing has been under discussion for some years. Here again, there seems to be a few opposed to what would obviously be of benefit to the majority and unnecessarily the stores are kept open Saturday nights.

What should really take place, it is claimed, for the best interests of all concerned, would be a decision for a weekly half-holiday for two months of the summer at least, and an unanimous desire to close Saturday nights throughout the year.

It is high time in the history of merchandizing when the public should be brought into recognition of the rights and privileges of the merchants. The dealer should have the public under better control, and it is his duty and opportunity to educate the consumers to do their shopping at more convenient hours

It is not a matter of losing money. The merchant cannot lose trade if he increases his dignity and prestige.

Two Clerks—One Brand of Good Sardines

How Lack of Tact and Absolute Crude Ignorance Resulted in a Woman Leaving One Store to Get What She Wanted Elsewhere—Salesmanship of Another Dealer Who Had All Information Ready on Tip of Tongue.

By J. W. Bryans.

THE man who said that "ignorance is bliss" never meant that quotation to apply to the grocery business. For in this, ignorance, especially of stock carried is the great unpardonable sin.

Examples of boorish ignorance of the crudest type, however, sometimes crop up as one travels about the country, and usually there is some comparison to follow of a bright clerk selling goods that tends to heighten the disparity between the two. A traveler here relates two specific cases aptly illustrating this point.

A Criminal Offence.

"While visiting a store not long ago," said he, "a lady customer entered and during her purchasing enquired of the merchant "Do you keep —— sardines." The dealer seemed to know as much about his stock as the ordinary man knows about the moon. On being asked this question, he began a hurried search around the shelves and under the counter and after the customer had about made up her mind that he had forgotten entirely about her, he came back and abruptly blurted out: "No! we don't keep them." After a silence of some minutes the merchant asked, "Would any other kind do?" in a manner as if he was committing a criminal offence in making such a suggestion. As he did not even take a can off the shelf to show her and as there was plenty of stores nearby where she could get the brand she wished, she went out without buying."

A Good Salesman.

"It was only about a week after this occurence that I was in another store where an exactly similar case happened but where it was handled much better. In this case a customer had also asked for a particular brand of sardines. "This is the brand we keep" said the merchant "It is the ——, and you will find it a most satisfactory article. They are a Norway sardine, and are the autumn-caught fish packed in the finest oil. They are uniformly sweet and have a flavor that I am sure you will like."

"Are they a small or a large sized fish?" enquired the customer and the merchant was off on a description of the size, telling how they could almost be called boneless, and in other ways bringing out the good points of the article."

What's The Difference.

The first merchant may say: "Well, what difference does that make, it is only 45c more for the three cans." If this merchant will take into consideration the number of customers that he waits on in a week, he will find that if he could sell each customer 45c worth over what they asked for, it would make the profits much larger. In this particular instance, an interesting feature is that the sardines the second merchant sold were the same brand the other had on his shelf but which he did not try to introduce to the customer. No doubt, if he had understood the goods, and had given the same selling talk as the second merchant, he could have easily sold to his customer.

The merchant if he wishes to be successful must be a real salesman. He should not be content with selling just what the customer asks for, but should put forth every effort to not only sell every customer who enquires for goods but also to increase the demand for new goods.

How are You Going to Figure Profits?

Simcoe Grocer Pins Faith to Method of Estimating From Capital Employed—Says Banks, Governments and Large Financial Institutions do Likewise—The Demonstration of the Folly of Figuring Percentage of Expense on Volume of Business, and of Profit on Cost.

Another merchant does hereby cross swords with Henry Johnson, Jr., in regard to methods of figuring profits. This time it is George O. Werrett, of Simcoe, Ont., who dissents from the opinion expressed by Mr. Johnson. His letter, in full, follows :—

Editor, Grocer :

Shortly after the article by Henry Johnson, Jr., re percentage appeared in your journal, I was inclined to give my views on the matter but refrained from doing so as controversies often cause feelings without doing good.

However, as the matter has been taken up by one outside the trade, I feel at liberty to express an opinion.

What it Demonstrates.

In the first place I must say I have thoroughly enjoyed Mr. Johnson's talks from time to time and have always agreed with him with the exception of this percentage argument. However, Mr. Johnson has certainly demonstrated one thing to the retail trade generally, that it is bad business methods to figure per cent. of expenses on volume of trade done and per cent. of profit on cost.

A Deceptive Method.

This mode of figuring is very deceptive. As an illustration a great many merchants will tell you that they average a profit of twenty per cent. and their expenses average sixteen per cent. leaving them a clear imaginary profit of four per cent. which they never discover to exist when stock-taking is over, as they have figured their per cent. of profit on cost and their per cent. of expense on volume of business done.

Has to Disagree.

This error has been dealt with by Mr. Johnson several times but will always stand repeating as it is a common error. As to the estimating of per cent. on the selling price I cannot agree with Mr. Johnson. As far back as our memories serve our schools, banks, governments and all large financial institutions always figure per cent. on a one hundred cent. basis based on the capital invested. In the case of a merchant what the goods actually cost, is the amount of capital invested. Estimating per cent. on the selling price is in my opinion estimating partly on an actual basis and partly on watered stock. The difference between the actual cost and the selling price being the watered stock.

The horse deal, only forcibly brings it to our attention that thirty-three and a third per cent. on cost is equalled by twenty-five per cent. off. Thanking you Mr. Editor for the valuable space, I remain,

G. O. WERRETT.

Where a Proprietor Neglected Chances

Disgust of a Good Customer Who Was Attracted by an Advertisement on Pickles, But Failed to Get Any Information From Clerk When He Called in the Morning—The Necessity of Co-operation in All Branches.

The salesman should have a full knowledge of the store's advertising, if the proprietor is to get the best results from the outlay. He should work in unison with it, in order to make it most effective.

"The evening paper contained an advertisement of pickles that impressed me with the quality," said a man who buys good things. "Next morning I called into the store and said: "Give me a bottle of those pickles which you are advertising."

"What kind are they?" asked the clerk.

"I don't know the name, but you advertised them in last night's paper. You said they were an extra fine pickle, and I thought I would try them."

"I don't know what kind it could be. We have several brands which are very good."

Desire Vanished.

"My desire for those pickles seemed to disappear. I had been favorably impressed with that brand, and believed they were something better than the ordinary, but if such was the case, the fact had not been impressed on this clerk."

Here was a case in which the advertising had been splendid. It had impressed a customer so that he had decided to buy. The clerk, however, had failed to work in unison with the advertising, and the sale had failed, while the customer's confidence in that store had dwindled away.

Should Co-operate.

This is but another case of failure to co-operate between the salesman and the advertising man. In any business everybody should work together for the desired object. The advertising, window trim, interior display and salesman's talk should all be along the same line.

Suppose you decide to push canned goods. Well, everything and everyone should work with that in view. In the advertising point out the merits of your canned goods along with other talk to promote sales. Then you will have a window trim that will attract those who are passing by. Then inside, to catch the customer's eye, is the counter display, and last, but by no means least, is the personal talk of the salesman. These are methods that will get results. Union is strength, and co-operation among all the selling factors in a store will bring the best results.

Delivery is an Important Part of the Business

The delivery is an important factor in the store's service. The grocery business is unlike any other in this respect, the needs of the consumer are more consistent and varied than in any other commodity, are frequently urgent and must be supplied at short notice, although the article may be small.

This makes it imperative that the delivery shall be prompt.

The number of people who depend on departmental stores for table supplies is increasing every day. The departmental stores delivery service is admittedly good. This service is made possible by the large volume of general business which usually averages from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually.

Many of the departmental stores maintain stables in the suburbs, and deliver the goods from these points just as quickly as the stores in the local neighborhoods may deliver the goods.

Delivery is a weak point in many of the small stores. In some cases the man who sells the goods, delivers them and also takes care of the delivery wagon and horse, in which case the consumer must wait for the goods until the grocer gets the opportunity and time to leave the store. In most cases this is only once, and not more than twice each day, generally at irregular hours. You can understand what this means to the housewife if she happen to be alone, not knowing when to expect the goods, and probably wishing to make a call or do some shopping, must wait until her grocer arrives, if not she will have to wait for her goods until the following day when the grocer makes his daily or semi-daily delivery.

Regularity is one of the necessities of the delivery, delivering the goods each day at the same time. It is not uncommon to hear a woman say that she likes to deal at a certain store, because she always knows when her goods will be delivered.

Delivering the goods in good condition, having pleasant and tidy delivery boys, are other things which are necessities. It does not help the reputation of the store if the sugar and other articles get soaked with kerosene or coal oil, and the eggs cracked or broken.

There is no doubt that delivery is an important factor in the grocery business.

CLOSE THE YEAR ROUND.

Reports come in to this office day after day purporting to show how one town after another is falling into line in regard to the weekly half holiday idea. Generally speaking there has been but little trouble in doing this, but here and there have been seen glimpses of discontent, especially in towns where the early closing once a week has become almost an institution.

The dealers in some centres again fly to the other extreme, as is instanced by a story from Winnipeg, where some dealers seem to desire to close on every Saturday night, and on one other afternoon each week in the summer time as well.

The difficulty appears to be that every year there is the reorganization of each dealer's trade to be effected before he can close for the few fleeting afternoons of the summer. Then each fears that one of the men will not close even if he does and so there is general doubt and distrust all around. It is a fact that every grocer should have as much relaxation from business worry as he can have, and keep his business where it belongs. There is no disputing that, for there are many cases to be pointed to where men carrying the responsibilities of big stores on their shoulders have been on the very threshold of a nervous breakdown because they would not or could not secure more hours of ease.

Manufacturing establishments all over the country seem to have no trouble in providing a half holiday one day EACH week to their employes. There is no reason under the sun why every retail dealer in Canada should not be able to do the same. There should be none of this worry over closing for a few days all told in the hot months. Let all the men agree to take one half day off per week, and regard it in the light they do Sunday, sacred, and there will be just about as much business done. But more than that there will be a fine, clear-eyed, bright body of retailers, every day of the year, in Canada.

THE NEW BULK SALES ACT.

At the last Session of the Saskatchewan Legislature, an Act, entitled, "The Bulk Sales Act" was passed and made law on the 14th of March by the assent of the Governor General of the Province.

This Act will have a far reaching effect upon the sale of businesses in bulk in the future. It has been enacted for the protection of the purchaser and the creditors of the Vendor and to prevent the perpetration of fraud on the part of persons desiring to sell their business, secure the cash for same and decamp without settling up their outstanding liabilities for the goods that they may have transferred in the transaction of sale.

Briefly, the Bulk Sales Act provides that the Vendor must supply the purchaser with a sworn statement containing the names and addresses of all his creditors together with the amount owing. It shall then be the duty of the purchaser before paying to the Vendor the purchase price, to obtain the written waiver from the creditors of the Vendor before paying over the sale price, or he shall pay the purchase money, or sufficient thereof to satisfy the claims of all the creditors of the Vendor into the hands of the Official Assignee to be distributed pro rata amongst the creditors, less the usual Assignee's fees. The purchaser, however, can obtain the consent of the creditors to turning over sufficient of the proceeds to a nominee mutually satisfactory, thus avoiding the expenses consequent upon handing same over to the Official Assignee. If the total purchase price is less than the total indebtedness of the Vendor, it is necessary to obtain the consent of 60 per cent. of such creditors before any sale can be effected, thus preventing a bogus sale at a low figure and preventing fraud by any side deal being effected by the Vendor in order to evade the provisions of the Act.

A sale is considered to be a sale in bulk whenever the entire stock-in-trade of the vendor is sold, or part thereof, out of the usual course of business or trade of the Vendor. The Act in Saskatchewan covers not only a stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, but also an Hotel or Wholesale License for the sale of intoxicating liquor.

If the provisions of the Act outlined above, are not carried out, the sale is void, as against the creditors of the Vendor, unless the creditors are paid in full, and said sale shall be deemed to be fraudulent, and the creditors are, through the Courts entitled to issue a Writ of Attachment against the goods covered by such sale.

The Manitoba Bulk Sales Act, which has been in operation for the past two years, and upon whose provisions the Saskatchewan Act was founded, was amended at the session of Parliament just closed, so as to require the consent of 60 per cent. of the creditors in case of a sale, thus remedying a defect in the original Act. This Act has been a great protection to the mercantile community and is very beneficial in its results.

THE MENACE OF CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES.

The visit of William Maxwell, of Scotland, to Canada, to arouse enthusiasm in regard to co-operative societies, seems to have been somewhat of a failure. Like a skyrocket, he came among us, and spoke his little piece, but, also, like this skyrocket, he has so far left no trace behind, his brilliant display of burning rhetoric seeming to have had little or no effect.

There are two matters for congratulation to the Canadian dealer in this. One is that no further disturbing element seems liable to enter into the legitimate field; the other, lies in the undoubted confidence the general public has in its army of retail distributors. But there is also the other side of the medal. William Maxwell came here with the avowed intention to help on the cause of co-operation. There is no doubt as to his intention. His onslaught doesn't seem to have had much effect upon the citadel of trade, and it is apparently as staunch as ever, but sometimes the strongest appearing fortress of all has been weakest by reason of the fact that the foundations had been undermined by burrowing workers.

There is not a retail dealer in Canada who can afford to abandon his watch on co-operative matters at the present time.

Prevention is the thing, because if disastrous legislation once passes the commons, it will prove a mighty hard fight to straighten the matter out. So the moral is to cultivate the habit of sleeping with one eye open.

WHAT AN ADVERTISEMENT IS.

A subscriber called at this office a short time ago and related how several professional men in his town had been running advertisements in the local paper, locating their places of business as opposite public buildings that had in the meantime been burned down and rebuilt in another part of the town. The notices had been running for years without change, and he wanted to know just how much good that information was to the men who were paying for it.

It sounds strange doesn't it, and one wonders how it is that men of sound intelligence could compound and consent to such foolishness. But the careless members of the learned professions are not alone—not by any means. There are dealers all over the country, who allow this condition to continue in their own publicity week in and week out. They send their "ad." into the local newspaper office; it is set up and goes to press, and probably that one writing suffices for a whole month, or worse still, for the entire year.

What would this self-same dealer think of a clerk who gave to his customers the same line of selling talk day in and day out? Guess he wouldn't think of anything else but discharging him. And yet that is what he is doing when he allows that bit of boiler-plate—for it can be called nothing else—to run in the newspaper, issue after issue. He is NOT advertising. That was designed to give a dealer the opportunity of speaking his little piece to many, where in the store he can explain it to but one or two. It is one talk multiplied many times. THAT is advertising.

It doesn't matter how small the community may be, there are some few people who are going to be interested in any well-written "ad." telling SOMETHING NEW about some store in the place. It cannot be otherwise. Nine times out of ten, the citizens of the place take a big daily paper, and if they do, they are sure to read the advertisements of the big publicity and mail order houses. Why? Because they are well written; they tell those folks some things they did not know before. They excite curiosity, and cause the dollars in their pockets to rise up and demand to be spent. In the cities there is not one out of a dozen of the thousands who daily throng the big department stores, who goes unless "something had been noticed in the paper to cause them to make the trip." That is fact.

Be wise then and USE the space being paid for. The newspaper is there, and the people are there, so why not get busy and take advantage of conditions?

STREET WAGON AGAINST STORE.

The other day a woman in one of the large Canadian cities needed some strawberries for dinner. Just as she was pressed for time, the raucous cry of a street peddler was wafted in through the open door. Flushed and bothered in the course of preparing the meal, she hurried to the street and purchased at once two boxes of strawberries that appeared fairly fresh. Setting them to one side in the kitchen she went on with her work, and imagine her annoyance when on taking the boxes up to clean, she discovered the berries to be mostly bad, and unfit for use. She was out about forty cents, and the meal was spoiled.

That is generally the way street selling works out in the end. There may one or two men who make a regular business out of selling direct, and who really try to keep their goods fresh always, but in general the policy of "sell anything" is the one followed. It is so easy for a vendor to disappear around the corner, and the price of the stuff he has sold is as secure to him as if he had it deposited in the Bank of England. There is not, and need not be, much principle about selling goods on the street.

The moral of course is that it is not the proper way to do business. It doesn't take much reasoning to prove that the dealer who has had his money tied down in his store in that locality for ten or twenty years, is a better place to buy goods than at a wagon on the open street. One can always get back to the store, because it cannot well run away.

THE VALUE OF A WELL-DRESSED WINDOW.

On one of the residential streets in Toronto there is located a store with two windows. They are dirty, and the panes of glass are small. In the display space of both windows is thrown—not arranged, but indiscriminately thrown—two piles of crockery and glassware. On the outside of the windows, and the whole front of the store, dust lies thick. What can be seen of the dark interior is treated to the same. That crockery is why. On either side of his dilapidated place are good places of business. These are getting the business. They DO NOT pile or throw crockery and glassware in THEIR windows.

Those who read the selling methods of the nine successful contestants in Canadian Grocer's Gold Medal Competition will find nine separate examples of how good window displays have paid them. They will learn that in every case, the display was built and arranged with the one object of selling goods. The men who dressed them frankly state they knew of no other reason why they should be dressed at all. If the attention of the public was not to be drawn to the goods that are to be purchased from the clerks within the store, there was no sense or reason in embellishing the goods in the windows.

It has been said the window is the eye of the store. It is more than that: it is the mirror in which is to be seen the business soul of the man who is running the place. A customer will pass by unheeding any window and any store that does not TELL HER SOMETHING; she will stop at, and be interested in, any display that performs this function. And she will do more than that. She will say that "there is a man who has a good line of goods, of which he is not ashamed."

It pays to acquire the art of dressing a window, just as it does to learn the "knack" of advertising. The public will respond, be sure of that, and the response always takes the form of dollars and cents in profits to the wise dealer. Line up to the spirit of the sign that carries the slogan: "No trouble to show goods."

ONE MORE HALF HOLIDAY.

Forest City Grocers Will Start Next Week.

London, May 25.—At a meeting of the executive of the Retail Grocers' Association last week. It was decided to add one more half-holiday to the summer half-holiday. The grocers will therefore start the Wednesday half-holidays on May 31st instead of on June 7th.

Manager Frank Paul, of the Grocers' base ball team, is arranging a game for that afternoon at Springbank.

Richard Thompson, for more than twenty years with T. A. Rowat & Co., has left to take a position in the Merchants Bank. "Dick" was the [illegible] days when "Ed." Ryan clerked in the Rowat establishment.

Bert Mills, a young clerk from Scandreth Bros., has taken a position with T. A. Rowat & Co.

NOT UNANIMOUS.

Early Closing Question Discussed at St. Catharines.

St. Catharines, Ont., May 24.—The early closing problem was discussed by local retail merchants at a recent meeting. Those present expressed themselves as in favor of shorter hours and a committee was appointed to wait upon the different merchants and endeavor to secure their signature to close at 6 p.m. every week night except Saturday and on the evenings preceding a holiday.

The meeting was not unanimous regarding the Wednesday half holiday, for while some dealers have agreed to observe it during June, July and August, others are in favor of closing at 5 o'clock each evening instead. The city council will be asked to place a heavy license on transient traders, the local merchants regarding it as unfair that itinerant auctioneers should be allowed to bring goods into the city, when they do not pay taxes. Other items of interest to the trade were discussed and the dust nuisance will be dealt with at the next meeting.

THE HUDSON'S BAY STORE.

Plans for Calgary Structure of Ten Storeys.

Calgary, May 25.—Plans which the Hudson's Bay Company have submitted to the inspector here, show that the building the old-established concern intends to erect here to house their department store business will be ten storeys in height.

The structure will be located on Seventh Ave., and on First street west. There are to be two entrances on the former street and one on the latter.

The first floor will be given over to drugs, clothing, blankets, jewelery, candies, etc. The second will contain most of the ladies' wear, including millinery and furs. The grocery department will be located on the third floor, where also will be placed the hardware and china and glassware stocks.

The mail order business will be centred on the fourth floor, and the drapery and carpet sections will be there also.

The fifth floor will be given over to general stocks.

A ballroom 66x72 is laid out on the sixth floor, and there is also to be a big concert room on the same flat. There also will be the public restaurant and dining room for the staff.

The shipping will all be done in the basement.

It is said only six floors will be provided for at the outset.

MAY REPEAL EARLY CLOSING

Spring Business Said to be Too Heavy for Set Hour.

Dresden, May 25.—Last December the town council, on petition of a majority of the merchants, passed a by-law compelling storekeepers to close their places of business on Saturday nights at 10.30 o'clock.

The by-law seemed to work all right in winter, but spring brought a different story, and its downfall came last Saturday. At 10.30 several of the stores were packed to the doors, and the merchants decided that it was not good business to turn customers away.

It looked as if Magistrate Turner would have a busy morning on Monday imposing fines, but Sam Chaffe, clothier, got busy with a petition for repeal which was soon sufficiently signed. In the meantime, no doubt, the prosecutions will not be pressed.

MUD GUARDS FOR WAGON.

London Merchant Adopts Protective Device on Outfit.

London, May 23.—G. B. Drake, grocer, corner Rectory street and Hamilton road has just tried out with success a new wrinkle in the shape of mud-guards on a delivery wagon. They resemble the guards on a phaeton, in width and shape, and Mr. Drake has found that they keep absolutely all dirt and mud from the box. The doors are at the side, it should be mentioned, and a brass block at the bottom of the box keeps the door from opening too far. The plan has worked so well that Mr. Drake anticipates introducing it on his other delivery wagons. This particular wagon is finished in glossy black, and the guards add, if anything, to the "classy" appearance.

NEW DEPARTMENT STORE.

Saskatoon to be Home of Large Retail Establishment.

Saskatoon, May 25.—Excavation work has already been practically completed in connection with the new four storey Cairns department store, to be erected in this city, and the architects are responsible for the statement that it will be when completed, one of the largest, if not the largest, structure of its kind between Winnipeg and the Pacific Coast.

This is not the first department store in this city. Saskatoon already has several and has had them for several years. But this new Cairns establishment is the largest of all and probably the most progressive.

It is to be constructed at the intersection of Second Avenue and 23rd St., there being a frontage of 100 feet on the former and 140 feet on the latter. It will be of fireproof construction throughout and the exterior is to be of light glaze terra cotta of simple design. There are to be two passenger elevators and broad stairs and the furnishings will be made to order.

How Government Views Fruit Prospects

Department of Agriculture Issues Bulletin Giving Status of Growth in Whole Dominion—Pear Yield in British Columbia Not Above the Average—Plum Yield Will be Extra Large Unless Adverse Conditions Arise—Small Fruits Have Wintered Well.

Ottawa, May 25.—The prospects for fruits in the Dominion as set forth in a report issued by the Department of Agriculture is given below : :—

Pear trees are in good condition. In the Niagara District they have begun to bloom and the showing is good. The frosts of the last few weeks have not injured them to any extent, and the wood growth of last season is fair. The British Columbia crop promises to be not more than an average one.

Above Average.

The commercial crop of plums this year will, in all probability, be above the average, if no adverse conditions arise. The crop was rather short last year in many sections, but the trees are in good condition. The black knot, though still present, is not prevalent to the extent of former years, and the tenderer varieties are being gradually eliminated. It is possible that the Japan varieties may show up well this year, though slight injuries have been reported from Southern Ontario and British Columbia.

The Peach Outlook.

"The outlook in Niagara District is good ; the orchards have been well cared for and the weather conditions so far have been favorable. Peach growing is not progressing rapidly in Essex county, is actually declining in Kent, but many new orchards are being planted in Lambton. The crop prospects are only medium, though there are few adverse reports from Lambton county. The British Columbia crop will be very light.

"Cherries are showing well in all sections. Though the trees are beginning to bloom nicely in the commercial orchards of Ontario, it is too early to speak confidently of the 'set' of fruit.

"Grapes have wintered well. The wood of last year was well matured and vigorous. Fortunately the buds were not far enough advanced to be injured by the recent frosts, and present indications look to at least an average crop.

Small Fruits.

"Small fruits generally have come through the winter well. An exception may be made, perhaps, in the case of strawberries, but this exception applies to only limited areas. The lack of snow and the heavy frosts after the snow had disappeared in some cases seriously injured the strawberry crop. Nevertheless if no further adverse conditions intervene, there will be a large aggregate, as there is an increased acreage this year. New Brunswick has now several large growers, and Nova Scotia is paying much more attention to small fruits than formerly. The indications in British Columbia are for a light crop.

"Raspberries and blackberries came through the season particularly well. Few winter losses were reported anywhere even on the moderately tender varieties.

"Currants and gooseberries are in their normal condition.

Tomatoes.

"No large commercial plantings have yet been made of tomatoes, but the plants are doing well in greenhouses, hotbeds and cold frames. The acreage contracted for by canners is somewhat larger than usual."

AUCTION IN MONTREAL.

Six Hundred Lots of Mediterranean Fruits Sold.

Montreal, May 25.—Six hundred lots of Mediterranean fruit which the Fremona brought to Montreal were sold by auction last Thursday. The fact that this was the only sale which the Thomson line will likely hold this spring, in addition to the knowledge that the fruit was of exceptionally good quality undoubtedly accounted for the brisk selling. Buyers from all parts of the eastern provinces were present, among them being representatives of the firms of Dixon Bros., Hamilton ; Ryerson Bros., Brantford ; the Quebec Fruit Exchange ; M. McDonald, Chesterfield ; the Sherbrooke Fruit Exchange, Sherbrooke ; Minecola Bros., Peterboro ; the Dominion Fruit Exchange of Ottawa ; Messrs. Austis, of Ottawa ; T. Eaton & Co., Toronto ; Gallagher Bros., of Ottawa ; Zakoor Bros., of Chatham ; A. Malouf, of Ottawa ; Hart & Tuckwell, John Barry & Son, George Vipond & Company and many of the smaller firms, who were buying for retail purposes only.

The prices realized were as follows :—Messina lemons, $1.25 to $2.55 per box ; Palermo lemons, $1.50 to $2.65 ; Sorrento lemons $2.00 to $4.65 ; Maiori lemons, $2.00 to $4.75 ; Lorrento oranges $1.75 to $3.10 per box, while half boxes of the same fruit brought from $1.00 to $1.45. Catania oranges, which were sold in half boxes only realized from 75 cents to $2.00.

A report from the Niagara fruit district on Friday last says :—

Notwithstanding the drought, the appearance of all classes of well-cultured fruit farms in this section is excellent. The outlook for peaches could not be better ; growers are a unit on this point ; plums, pears and cherries indicate a bumper crop, and strawberries and grapes are bound to be above the average.

FANCY TEA BAGS.

Dealer Found This to be Profitable Buy for Him.

A local grocer who has quite an extensive tea trade recently said:

"I had been selling a bulk tea and after a little study on the matter decided that a fancy bag ought to help the sale of it, because people are naturally attracted by a fancy package. I purchased quite a large quantity with my name on, tied up a big quantity of tea in these bags, and placed them on the shelves. I found that the fancy bag helped a great deal in its sale, and while the bags cost me more than the ordinary, the advertising on them fully made up for this extra cost."

DEATH OF J. M. DONOVAN.

Announced with regret is the death of J. M. Donovan, grocer, of Peterboro, Ont., who passed peacefully away in that city on Friday last. The late Mr. Donovan had been in ill-health for some time, being afflicted with a malady, however, which, while serious, was not considered as particularly deadly. The end came quite suddenly.

Deceased opened up a store on Charlotte street some years ago, but illness, after a year or two of business, compelled his temporary retirement. Subsequently, however, he resumed. He was a frequent contributor to Canadian Grocer, and was always willing and anxious to do what he could to help on such of his fellow-dealers who needed the aid of his friendly counsel.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Peanuts.—Price ½ to 1c higher.
Figs—Reduction offered.
Rice—Firmer.

Montreal, May 25.—Midsummer weather has had a decided effect on the trade. The demand is changing toward articles of a summer character. Starch, rice and tapioca, jelly powders, home beverages, cooked meats, etc., all these, are coming to the front to a greater extent than during the winter months.

There has been but few happenings of late. In dried fruits it might be well to state that some of the jobbing trade are holding out concessios to purchasers of figs. They give as their reason the fact that they are a little too well supplied for this time of the year and wish to reduce their stocks.

In regard to nuts a recent fire destroyed 50,000 bags of peanuts in Virginia. This depletion of stocks combined with the present heavy park and baseball demand has given the market a firmer tone. The local market shows a slightly higher position.

The market this week in eggs, butter, cheese and provisions to a certain extent shows an inclination to lower prices. The situation is steady just now, but those in close touch with conditions claim to see a little easiness here and there that may soon have direct results.

The demand for fruit has improved to a considerable extent. It is a question among the trade as to whether lemons are likely to hit a high market this summer.

Sugar.—The market is rather uneventful. There is some demand, but it is more of the ordinary call that may be expected at this time of the year. The primary market is steady, but there has been nothing of special interest happening of late.

Dried Fruits.—There is practically no change in the situation. Prices are firm and the market fails to show any signs of weakness. Reports from California bear out what has been said about the growing crops there. There is apparently not much business passing just at present either in the retail or jobbing way, or between the buyers and sellers of future goods.

Rice and Tapioca.—Reports from the south convey the fact that the rice market is quite firm. Tapioca is also stronger in tone and in some instances wholesalers are asking a higher price for seed tapioca. Both these markets are showing a healthy feeling. There ought to be a tendency upon the part of grocers to sell more of these goods during the summer months, when the demand is usually good.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS.
Dried Peaches—Higher.
Rice—Holders holding product.
Currants—Firmness maintained.

Toronto, May 24th.—The appearance of white goods upon the counters of the dry goods merchant is a sign for the grocer to act upon. It indicates that he will find a demand for soaps and starch springing up in the near future. He should be prepared for this demand by complete stocks, and it might even be well to give prominence to these articles for a time.

Dealers state that more attention is now being given to pickles, olives, soups, lemonade powders, essences and certain lines of canned goods, since the weather became warmer. Trade on the whole is only fair, the lack of business in sugar making the volume transacted appear small.

The rice market in the Southern States has taken a rather sharp upward turn, ideas of holders being fully ¼ cent higher. Up to a short time ago the market was decidedly quiet and weak, and prices were quoted at about cost of production, a two million bag carry-over being predicted. However, since some supplies were worked off by export sales to Europe, a stronger feeling has been displayed. Conditions of the growing crop in the rice sections of the United States are good at present.

A report from Sacramento, California, says in regard to the fruit crop there: "Apricots will be a short crop in California this season, and will probably be a little higher than in previous seasons. The peach crop will not be as heavy as last year, and while there will be plenty of fruit available for shipment, the dried product is going to sell for a better price than usual. In regard to prunes, everything will depend upon weather conditions in the producing districts during the next couple of weeks. If these prove to be favorable, then the estimates of a crop of 150,000,000 pounds in California, or even a larger yield than this, may prove to have been justified. On the other hand, if the climatic conditions, as indicated by reports received here within a day or two continue to retard the development of young fruit, the estimates made by some of 100,000,000 pounds or less would be not any too high. It is all a matter of uncertainty, and in the meantime none of the packers are at all anxious to take chances by making firm quotations on October shipments..

Sugar.—The sugar market is quiet and raws have gained no ground during the past week. Conditions, however, would seem to indicate that prospects for a firm or even advancing market. Refiners will sooner or later have to get European or Java sugar into New York, and both are now above present levels for Cuban raws. Cuban news indicating more definitely the total output of the island is now being awaited. The Journal of Commerce says: "Refiners' supplies are now over 100,000 tons less than last year. Naturally they are expected to show more interest in June shipment sugar, and an active buying movement is expected soon in that position. Cuban cables have not been of a character to depress prices of raws, rains being reported with a reasonably large decrease in the number of centrals grinding. At the same time recent estimates of the crop seem likely to prove too low, judging by the total movement to date, and there is a possibility of 1,600,000 tons being reached.

Dried Fruits.—Dried peaches are quoted at advanced prices by some firms this week, the heavy demand throughout the season having reduced stocks to quite a low basis. Dried fruits in general maintain the strength that has been mentioned for some time back.

A despatch from Patras in regard to currants, says: "On this side stocks are daily decreasing, and now only about 13,000 tons remain unsold. It is therefore believed that present prices at least will be maintained, the more so as the demand from abroad has somewhat increased lately. As to the new crop, it is too early yet to say anything positive, but judging from present appearances, it looks like a moderate crop."

The report from Smyrna that the coming fig crop would likely be short, has not strengthened the local market on figs.

Tea.—The local tea situation is unchanged, and the firmness in the market seems to be pretty well maintained. A London tea report says:—

"Although the prices of common and low medium teas are somewhat easier, yet there is a very strong undercurrent of buying from some of the larger blending houses, which buying must continue right throughout until there is a much larger quantity to deal with in the London sales. Week by week these blending houses can practically only secure their immediate requirements, and any attempt to increase their stocks will immediately force the market up considerably. However, there appears to be a working arrangement to obviate any such thing, so in all probability prices will keep on a normal basis during the next month or two. At the same time, there may be a tendency towards lower prices for common Ceylons during the next few weeks for, by that time, we shall be having larger arrivals which will consist mainly of common kinds, and there is also information in from India that this season has opened considerably earlier, owing to favorable weather which all help to allay any fears of a shortage during July and August."

Coffee.—Speculative coffee is reported firmer in New York, but the big demand that has been expected for some time has as yet failed to materialize, although there has been some improvement. The local situation shows no particular change, although prices are well maintained. A local dealer said: The statistical position is strong and even making some allowance I can see nothing but a continued steadiness in values and think that present prices will be well maintained."

CANNED GOODS

Toronto.—One firm this week reports that canned soups are being given more attention, as their sale increases as the weather becomes warmer. Dealers who handle soups should anticipate the wants of their customers, while those who have not a demand for them should consider the possibility of working up a trade. While people at this season of the year like a change to green vegetables, still there is a certain demand for the canned article that has to be supplied. New tomatoes are high in price, and for this reason, the demand for canned tomatoes continues at a satisfactory volume. While the arrival of fresh fruits tends to decrease the consumption of canned, still the high prices of the fresh article and the fact that the housewife's shelves are bare of supplies, makes a demand felt and it is stated that even when fresh fruits are at their cheapest that there is a certain demand for the canned article. Prices are unchanged.

MANITOBA MARKETS

Pointers—

Sugar—Firm.

Evaporated Apples—May stand watching.

Coffee—General market easier.

Winnipeg, May 25.—Little change this week is noticed in the grocery business. Trade has assumed its general summer appearance, and predictions are that from the present stocks now on hand, prices will hold steady for a while. Ideal weather continues to prevail for the growing crop, and the recent rain which fell over the entire west, drove away the slightest chance of there being insufficient moisture in the ground to get the grain well started. Seeding is well under way in all sections, most districts hoping to wind up operations in a few days. The feeling that a bumper crop is going to be reaped this year is reflected on the grocery trade and consequently larger and more numerous orders are being filed by country travelers than for many a summer.

The sugar market continues to hold firm, and large quantities are being used by local vendors. The upward march of syrups appears to have been checked for the present, but the prevailing opinion is that it has not yet reached the high point. New lines of maple syrup have arrived on the market from Quebec and are being sold at about the same price as last year. Evaporated apples are off the market and the prospects are that higher prices will prevail at the marketing of the new crop. The coffee market is a little easier this week but as yet no difference has been noticed in the price. Gallon apples have advanced to $2.

Sugar.—No change has taken part in this line, but the tone of the market continues firm. Conflicting opinion regarding the future movements are prevailing. With the arrival, however, of the season when large quantities of soft drinks are used, which of necessity require large quantities of sugar, combined with the report of stronger markets to the south, it seems unlikely that lower figures will prevail just yet.

Dried Fruits.—All lines of this branch of the trade are being held at high figures, and practically no change is noticed.

Syrup and Molasses.—Maple syrup from the eastern provinces is now being offered in fairly large quantities at figures that prevailed last year. The demand cnhrfuues to hold good. retailers having laid in fairly heavy stocks so as to be in readiness for the holiday camping demand which is expected to start in a few weeks.

Coffee.—The coffee market continues to act off but no serious decline has taken place during the week. Wholesalers refuse to give any predictions on the line as they are in a quandary themselves. Fairly large stocks are at present held here and it is not likely that any serious change will prevail for a while yet.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS

St. John, N.B., May 25.—Although there has been little vegetation in this province as yet, reports from almost every agricultural section are encouraging, and to the effect that the outlook for farmers has seldom been better. Warm rains, however, are badly needed, both to give the grass a good start, and to aid in places where seed is in the ground. The dry weather has given every opportunity for ploughing and harrowing, and already, considerable planting and seeding have taken place.

Prices in the country market are quite strongly maintained. The first of the season's green goods is commencing to appear in the stalls. Native rhubarb is offering wholesale at four cents which is considered cheap for this season of the year. Eggs and butter are firm, while cheese has come down a cent a pound.

Dried fruits still maintain their firmness on the market, and remain at the prices increased last week, with the exception of dried peaches, and owing to their being fairly low in price, the demand for them has considerably increased. Indications are that the cost of peaches will be higher than last season. Because of the fact that there is nearly half a year to elapse before the new pack of evaporated apples will be put on the market, and owing to the present scarcity, it is difficult to tell what advances will be made.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, May 25.—Taken all around, local wholesalers report the May trade up to the standard of other years, and an improvement over April. There is also a decidedly better tone to collections, due largely to the better conditions which prevailed in lumbering and shipbuilding, which provided steady employment and good wages for large numbers of men.

There are few price changes, quotations in general groceries holding steady. This is particularly true of all lines of dried fruits.

Rolled oats in sympathy with the firmness in the raw material advanced 20 cents per barrel last week. Butter and eggs show no marked change. Local demand for butter is about normal and sufficient stocks are arriving to satisfy all requirements.

The Relations of Printer and Grocer

Hints for the Dealer Who Would Appreciate a Pleasing Arrangement of Type for His Bill Head or Check Book—How Sales Pads are Spoiled—The Principles the Same as Window Dressing—Two Examples Compared.

THERE are a great many merchants who have no idea of the manner in which type should be displayed to make the most effective display. The manner in which the sales pads of many merchants are prepared shows this statement to be true. The aim which is to have the pad of such an appearance that it will be read is not always attained.

It follows the same principle as window dressing. Some merchants attempt to show something of everything they carry in stock in the window at one time. The result is always different to what they thought it would be. The effect is greatly decreased and the window receives only passing attention. There are so many different articles shown that the customer's attention is not centered on any one, which is necessary. The wise window trimmer shows only a moderate number of lines, and tries to make of them an attractive display that will catch the eye.

Aim of Sales Pad.

The same is true of the sales pad. Some merchants try to crowd the heading of their sales pad as much as possible. They want to print in the heading every item handled by them, fearing that the customer will surely not know of all the lines they do carry unless they do this. They are in hopes the customer shall take time to study out all the articles named. The general result is that the heading of the pad not only presents an unattractive appearance, but also that it is not read by the customer. Thus the merchant defeats his own purpose. A person will not take time to read a crowded pad head any more than they will read a crowded advertisement in a newspaper nor stop to look in a crowded window.

A Comparision.

Below will be found specimens of two pad heads illustrating the point that has been raised. Notice how clearly and boldly the sales pad of P. J. Galvin stands out. It carries out the purpose that should be aimed at. It gives the name of the proprietor prominence. It impresses the name on the customers' minds, so that they will remember it when they wish to again make a purchase. No one could help knowing that Mr. Galvin is in the grocery and provision business. It is plain but attractive. It advertises the name of the man and the goods sold as well as if a great deal more had been said, while its value has not been lost by crowding.

Just Necessary Wording.

To compare this pad head with that of the Central Cash Grocery. First, that one is not attractive. Then it does not do the advertising that the originators aimed at. They have not only defeated their purpose, but have spoilt the appearance of the pad. The line "best quality, lowest prices," does not gain anything for the firm. The people have seen the same things boasted of by the worst and highest priced grocery in town. Even the line "Groceries, provisions, teas and coffees," could have been omitted without affecting the story to be told in the head, as this impression is fully conveyed to the customer in the name "Central Cash Grocery." Besides the customer has most likely visited the store to make the purchase and knows what is kept. "Bought of" might also have been left out, as the customer knows that it is a bill of the goods that has been purchased.

Bill Heads.

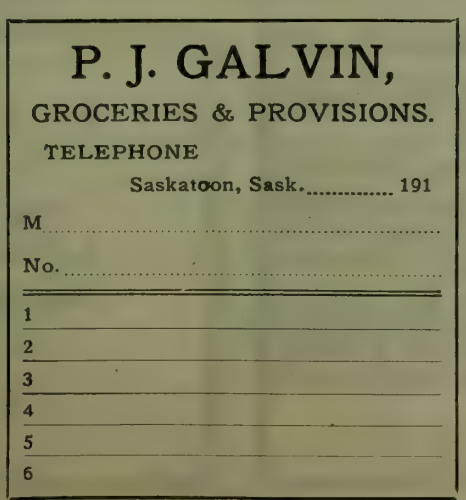
This also pertains to the bill heads that the merchant uses, and also to his advertisement in the newspaper. Do not try to say too much in the space allotted to you. That sort of thing always reminds of a speaker trying to deliver a twenty-minute address in five or ten minutes.

The merchant in sending his copy to the printer should give him an idea of how he wishes it set. Printers do not always give the attention they should to the arrangement of the print. So if it is to be made attractive, you should see to it yourself.

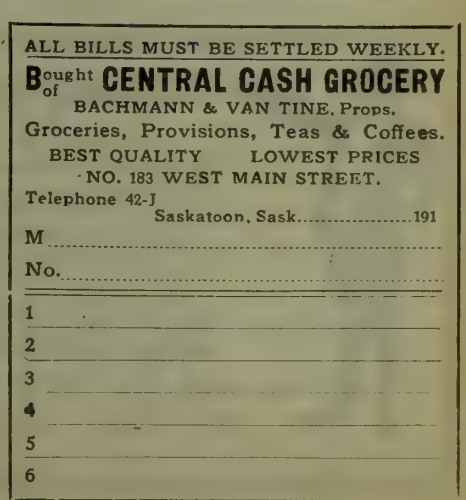
The idea which it is your desire to express should be clearly shown in your copy. Avoid crowding. Tell your story fully, but tell it so briefly that the pad or bill head is made attractive and easily read.

Believes in Shelf Display.

Calgary, May 18.—A local grocer believes that display is an important factor in the sale of goods, and especially groceries. In speaking on the subject recently he said: "Many grocers realize the importance of display and take great care with their windows and counter displays, but seem to give no attention whatever to the shelves, which I regard as valuable selling agents. Open to the view of all customers in the store, they are an excellent silent salesman, and I therefore take particular pains to have them present an attractive appearance. So that I might have as large amount of goods on the shelves in view of customers as possible, I recently moved my counters out from the shelves farther so that when customers stand at the counter more shelf space is visible to them."



INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.



Supplied to the Trade by Sellers

In a pamphlet prepared for circulation among the trade, the Crescent Manufacturing Company of Seattle, Wash., points out in connection with the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the U.S.A., in regard to price-cutting that they will make no change in the methods they employ in placing Crescent Brand of goods upon the market. "Our goods," they say, "are right. Our prices are right and they give to the dealer, wholesale and retail alike a fair margin of profit and at the same time protect the consumer. It is our confidence in the final common-sense interpretation of the law which is the basis for the stand we take, and for the continuance of our methods that have proven so satisfactory to all concerned."

MacFarlane, Lang & Co., biscuit manufacturers, Glasgow, Scotland, have an especially appropriate biscuit on the market at the present time. It is a "Coronation" biscuit of a rich shortbread nature and has an inlaid crown of pure chocolate. It's attractive appearance and rich eating qualities will command for it a ready sale particularly in

Live Hog Markets are Holding Steady

After Continued Decline—Some Dealers Believe That Position of Steadiness Has Been Reached — English Market Barely Steady—United States Markets Slightly Easier—Butter and Eggs are Steady to a Shade Easier—New Cheese is Weaker—Production Prospects Bright.

Canadian live hog markets are holding steady, and this has led some dealers to believe that a position has now been reached where prices will likely hold. At least there has been more than one dealer express a similar opinion. However the English market is barely steady while markets in the United States are a shade easier. Trade is fairly satisfactory, but the holiday has interfered with business to a certain extent.

According to the compilations of the Cincinnati Price Current, "the supply of hogs in the Western States the past week has not shown enlargement, as usually occurs at this time in the season. There is a decrease in comparison with the preceding week, while the record last year for the corresponding time showed an important increase."

The make of butter continues quite large and the Toronto market has seen some slight reductions in price, and while Montreal and Winnipeg have ruled steady, the tendency seems towards easiness. A fairly good demand is being experienced at most points. The demand from the west has prevented the accumulation of supplies on some of the eastern markets, but this demand has not been so large of late. There are no prospects of finding an outlet for any surplus of supplies on the English markets as they are demoralized by heavy supplies of Australian and New Zealand stock.

While eggs show no change in regard to quotations, the feeling is towards slightly lower prices. United States prices are easier, while arrivals here are quite large, showing an increase over the same season last year. Demand is well maintained.

New cheese under heavier offerings exhibits a weaker tendency. The English markets seem to be pretty bare of supplies, but inquiries so far have been a little out of line with values here. Prospects seem bright for a heavier production of cheese this year than last.

MONTREAL

Provisions.—The market shows but little change this week. There is an improved demand for cooked meats since the weather has become so warm. The recent decline in price has had but little effect on the market which seems to be generally inclined to quietness.

Cheese.—The season is behind last year's but with a fair supply of rain henceforth the production should show a big increase. Provisions.—The provision market is unchanged with the exception of lard which is quoted ½ cent lower by most houses this week. Live hog prices are steady to a shade higher. Domestic trade is fairly satisfactory for the time of the year. Trade in smoked meats is increasing.

Butter.—Receipts of butter still continue heavy and larger than the present demand for the article, although a fair trade is being done, as a result prices are lower again this week. There seems to be an abundance of supplies at the different markets throughout the province, so that the tendency would appear to be towards a continuance of the present lower prices.

Provisions.—Further declines have taken place in the lard market and still lower prices are expected. This drop has been in sympathy with the Chicago markets, where the lard market has been on the decline steadily for the last month. The price of live hogs continues to remain between $6.75 and $7.00 while that of live cattle has been advancing slightly, one load selling for $6.75 per cwt. one day last week. This was the high price for the year. Changes will be noticed as follows:

Butter.—Some four additional creameries have been reported in operation during the week, but the output from all the creameries now in operation at country points in Manitoba would probably not exceed 2,000 lbs. a week, and prices are holding steady. Practically no freshly made dairy butter is being received and dealers complain that the quality of the held stuff shipped in gets worse and worse.

Eggs.—Eggs have advanced another ½c for the week. It is hardly likely, however, that they will go much higher, as the supply on the American side is abundant, and they could be laid down here duty paid at practically the current price of 17½c.

Cheese.—No great change has taken place. Eastern cheese is quoted at 14

Eastern Dealer Favors Handling of Package Goods

Twenty-five years brings a great many changes and perhaps in the past score and five years there has been no greater changes than in the grocery business. During that time a grocer will have a varied experience and will have been confronted with many important problems which every business man is called on to solve from time to time, and which must be overcome in order that he may hold his place in the contest.

"What do you regard as the most important change in the grocery business in the past twenty-five years?" was asked a grocer in Fredericton, N.B., who has been in business for that length of time.

"Well," he replied, "perhaps the greatest change in that time is in the manner in which food is served to the customer. When I first went into business nearly everything was sold in bulk, from breakfast foods to molasses and we even used to fill up twenty-five pound bags of flour ourselves from the larger sacks. Even baking powder, I used to always sell by bulk. To-day there is hardly an article we sell that is not put up in some size of package, although some grocers still stick to the bulk method with many articles.

"This change from bulk to package has been beneficial to the grocer. In my opinion the package sale saves a great deal of labor and waste. When a grocer sells a package article he knows exactly how much he has made on the transaction, while by the bulk system, it was hard to figure the profit on account of unavoidable waste and shrinkage."

"Now, besides the saving in labor, it is getting much easier to sell package goods than bulk. The package method I think is the more sanitary method of handling food, and the customer has more confidence in buying goods done up in this way. The maker's name on the package gives them a double guarantee of quality, as both the dealer who sells it and the manufacturer who makes it, stands behind it.

"By the package method," he continued, "goods are fresher, as the package preserves the quality, and goods do not have to be bought in as large quantities, which is better for the customers because they get fresher goods and, for the grocer because he does not have so much money invested at a time."

THE SALESMAN'S CREED.

I believe in the goods I am selling, in the firm I am working for and in my ability to get results.

I believe that honest goods can be sold to honest men by honest methods.

I believe in working, not waiting; in laughing, not weeping; in boosting not knocking; and in the pleasure of selling goods.

I believe that a man gets what he goes after; that one order to-day is worth two orders to-morrow; and that no man is down and out until he has lost faith in himself.

I believe in to-day and the work I am doing; in to-morrow when it comes and the work I am to do; and in the sure reward which the future holds.

I believe in courtesy, in generosity, in good cheer, in kindness, in friendship, and in honest competition.

Wm. T. Chandler, a clerk for D. W. Taylor, grocer of Toronto has been arrested on a charge of theft. The employer says this has been going on for some time, and he estimates his total loss at $500. According to the story, two friends of the accused when the proprietor was absent, purchased about $5 worth of goods, giving $2.50 in exchange while the clerk rang up ten cents on the cash register and pocketed the rest.

Domestic Trade Fair; Export is Quiet

Home Trade is Fairly Satisfactory, but Export Inquiries are Not Brisk—Prices are Unchanged—Wheat is Lower Under Recent Rains—No Prospects for Change in Flour Prices While Present Conditions Exist—Oat Market is Slightly Easier.

Prices in both flour and cereals are unchanged this week. The flour situation is about the same as it was a week ago, and there seem to be no prospects of any change in prices while the present conditions obtain in the wheat market. Domestic trade is fair in volume, but export inquiries have not been particularly brisk of late. The cereal trade is lagging somewhat, as can be expected with the advent of the warmer weather. However, one dealer said that the cereal and flour trade were both keeping up wonderfully well.

The wheat market at this time of the year is usually of a speculative character, and prices fluctuate on crop reports and weather conditions. With a change to showery weather in the wheat-growing area at the beginning of the week, conditions in the wheat market favored the bear side, and the market as a result exhibited a little easier tone.

Rolled oats at the present time are steady at last week's advanced prices. Prospects in the oat market do not at least point to any higher values in rolled oats just now.

One dealer in speaking of the situation said: "After the May deal in oats is over, I expect to see oats react again. There seems to be a large quantity of oats in the country yet. There has been a very good export trade in oats of late, but it has been mostly for the lower grades."

Flour.—The flour situation shows no particular change from a week ago. No. 1 Northern Manitoba wheat is down to 98 cents, and all talk of any advance in flour prices while wheat remains at that figure has been silenced. Domestic trade is fairly large in volume, but export enquiries are rather slack. The delivery of Ontario wheat is small, and No. 2 winter wheat still remains around the 85 cent mark.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—An increase of 20 cents per barrel is quoted on rolled oats, which local dealers say are much higher than is usually the case at this time of the year. The common brand of oatmeal now sells at from $5.25 to $5.30 per barrel, while the standard brings from $5.75 to $5.80. Dealers here say that buyers are experiencing considerable difficulty in securing supplies of oats, as the growers in the West have withheld them, and until they unload there will be a continued strong market.

IN CARE OF CEREALS.

The season for the large consumption of cereals is now here and the merchant should look after his share of this trade. A great deal of care has to be exercised that stocks may be kept in perfect condition, as the use of cereals in many households is stopped because a quantity has been received which was a little "off." Especially with the advent of the warmer weather, care has to be taken. A few rules for the care of cereal stocks are here given:

Give your cereals all the fresh air and sunlight you can. Worms love dampness—weevils thrive in stagnant air.

Always fill orders from your oldest stock.

Keep all odorous articles away from cereals. Many so-called "musty" cereals are goods which have taken up the taint of coal oil, fish, soap or fruit.

Do not expose bulk cereals to the flies.

Keep warehouse where they are stored absolutely free from dirt and rubbish, the breeding places of weevils and worms.

Keep small boxes of slacked lime in the storehouse at intervals throughout your cereal stock. Refill the boxes twice monthly.

Grocers to Picnic at Cobourg in June

The Twenty-sixth Annual of T. R. G. A. to be Held on 14th—The Discussion on Scales and the Weighing of Goods — Holidays and Their Observance—To Work for Strong Organization.

The 26th annual picnic of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association will be celebrated at Cobourg on June 14th next. This was one of the things decided upon after considerable discussion, at the regular monthly meeting of the association in the Temple building. The trip to the bright summer town will be made by boat, and D. Bell and B. Snow were appointed a committee to visit the town and conclude arrangements with the local authorities for the festivities.

Another matter which provoked talk was that of the housewife's scales. One of the members complained that scales were now being sold marked "Not for commercial use." The opinion was expressed that as the goods sent out by the dealer are weighed in the home and the weight tested, the scale used in the pantry should be just as correct and subject to just as much inspection as the weighing machine on the grocer's counter. If suspicion was to be cast upon the dealer, it should not be by such means as this.

One example of this in the city was related by the president, whereupon a member said: "If these scales are not correct enough to weigh goods before leaving the store, they are not good enough to weigh them afterwards."

A general discussion on weighing then took place, the different kinds of scales and methods employed being introduced. It was pointed out by one member that if you start a clerk weighing out a hundredweight of sugar that it is generally the rule that 100 lbs. cannot be secured when put into smaller packages. Carefulness in weighing was advocated that this loss might be reduced to a minimum.

Some members expressed the opinion that there were too many holidays following in close succession.

Means and methods for the extension of the association to make it a more powerful organization were discussed at some length, and a general effort will be made in the near future to increase the membership.

The need of a strong organization of grocers was pointed out. There were many items affecting them coming before the civic authorities, and they should see that their rights were guarded. One of these matters is the display of goods outside, that if the grocer is forced to cover his goods thus shown, the peddler should be made to do likewise.

H. Graham, Lansdowne Ave.; H. Sanderson, Palmerston Ave.; S. L. Malty, Bloor St.; G. S. Squirrel, Spadina Ave., and D. Cooper, Ontario St., were entered as members of the association, while ten others were proposed for membership.

Selling Seeds.

The merchant who sells seeds in bulk should display them in jars. If lithograph labels are pasted on these jars it will help in sales as it at once acquaints the customer with the contents.

IN PREPARING FOR THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

Suggestions as to How Dealer May Take Advantage of Loyal Patriotic Fervor of Good Canadians at This Season — Fruits and Confectionery—Vegetables—An Attractive Window Display Necessary.

"The Twenty-fourth of May,
It's the Queen's birthday,
If you don't give us a holiday
We'll all run away."

This couplet of schoolboy years is brought to mind in the loyal thoughts of every good Canadian as the famous holiday draws nigh.

There has been no jangling rhyme composed to voice the feeling of the people in regard to the celebration attendant upon the birthday of the King, but the same sturdy spirit that beat within the breasts of Canada's schoolboyhood in the reign of the good Queen is at this moment stirring the pulses of the young manhood of the nation when thoughts of His Majesty's natal day are uppermost.

June 3rd is the King's birthday, and the grocer should make some extra effort to make his store attractive and in keeping with the holiday. The people are in a holiday mood and therefore more free with their money. The goods which will appeal to them while in this frame of mind should be attractively presented.

Fruits and confectionery are two lines which receive considerable attention at this time, and the dealer should see that stocks are complete and should also make some plans to induce extra sales with these lines. Both fruits and confectionery are lines which are bought more freely by customers when shown, and it would be well to have a window trim displaying these.

Being the King's birthday, it is only fitting that the window contain a picture of our sovereign. Being a patriotic occasion, a plentiful use of flags in its arrangement will also add to its attractiveness. The words "King George," or "His Birthday," or something along these or similar lines could be written on the floor of the window with oranges or some other goods that will show up well. Another suggestion is for a large flag forming the background, with the King's picture in front, and a card, "One King, One Flag, One Empire." The store can be decorated along the same line, according as the merchant wishes, but it is well to have both the window and interior trim arranged early in the week so as to reap full benefits.

New vegetables will be in fairly large supply, and as people generally attempt to have something special for the table on these occasions, they can be pushed to good advantage. They may also be included in the window trim. While the dealer is urged to have a sufficiently complete stock to take care of all trade, nevertheless, he should use some judgment in figuring on his requirements that his special effort on account of the amount of left-over and unsalable stock may not be turned into a loss.

WHAT TO DO IN JUNE.

A Few Hints That Might be of Interest to Some.

Put some life into your cereal trade. Carry a sufficient stock and give the lines prominence. Do not, however, stock too heavily. Fresh goods are those that bring continued trade.

This is the pineapple season. Try to sell your customers quantities for preserving. This is of double value, as you generally sell sugar also. Don't forget to mention sugar in making the sale.

Canadian strawberries will be in full swing before the month is out. If you get customers buying fruit from you now, they may continue with you during the whole season.

With two holidays in the month, it is well that you give some attention to your fruit trade, as these occasions generally bring an increased demand for fruits.

Canned meats, pickles, olives and similar lines will come into demand now with the warmer weather. Have these summer goods ready when the demand first starts and thus reap the full benefit of the demand. Prepare ahead, but don't wait for the demand to start itself. Start it yourself.

Nuts compose a line that it would pay the retailer to carry a complete stock of. New crop Brazils are just on the market, and should sell well. The big groceries in the cities are showing nuts to good advantage, and why not you?

Take one line for the month out of the lines you handle, on which you think there is a chance to extend sales, and give that one line special attention during the whole month. If it is important enough, start the month off with a window display, carrying also a counter display, and using your personal salesmanship and you will find results at the end of the month have paid you for the extra effort.

There is nothing like rushing the season. Be the first to interest customers. Start early to display your fly paper, soft drinks and other summer goods.

An Inspiration for Clerks to Work Hard

Success of Two Montreal Clerks Who Decided They Had Mastered all Details of Grocery Business and Who Went Into a Partnership in Westmount District — The Three Essentials They Deemed Necessary.

By H. T.

This article is written principally as an encouragement and an inspiration to clerks.

The condition of the clerk is steadily improving, and the grocery business offers just as many opportunities as the average avenue of human endeavor. Proprietors realize that there is a dearth of assistants. Other openings, offering better salaries, have lured many a young man that might have made a good grocer. One result is that salaries in the grocery business have materially increased, owing largely to the fact that the number of assistants is much below the store vacancies. But the clerk possessing ambition looks forward to the time when he will be working for himself, or occupying some high position in the trade or in one of the affiliated lines. His upward struggle, however, is trying at times. The openings seem too slow in presenting themselves, and there are occasions when the clerk is strongly tempted to forsake the apron for some other activity with prospects more alluring.

What Two Clerks Did.

The story of the Westmount Grocery Co., Sherbrooke St., Montreal, is but one illustration of the opportunities that are awaiting young men who have a thorough grounding in the handling of groceries.

R. Normandeau and S. Durocher, the proprietors of this store, were three years ago two young clerks in one of Montreal's oldest and most prominent retail grocery stores. Mr. Normandeau had served ten years behind the counter and Mr. Durocher's experience covered practically the same time.

Their relationship was friendly and intimate. They realized that they could get along well together. That indefinable something existed, and each of the two young men were intuitively aware of the fact.

Came to a Decision.

They began to feel that they had about mastered the details of the grocery business from the clerk's standpoint, and the fact that they had been under the guidance of a good grocer was a valuable asset in more ways than one. They had saved up money sufficient to warrant a venture into business for themselves, and finally they decided to cast their lot in Westmount. This is a suburb of Montreal that can boast of pretty homes, and a large share of wealthy householders.

Judge of the place by the fact that strict building regulations are in force to keep out the house that does not register up to a certain dollar mark. Three years ago it was rapidly growing, and since then new territory has been opened up, and will continue to do so.

It was in this district that Mr. Normandeau and Mr. Durocher selected their store site, and on Sherbrooke St., Montreal's Fifth Avenue. Not only was it a growing place, but there was the other consideration that these young men were personally known to many residents in that neighborhood, whom they had served during their clerkship days.

Had Some Doubts at First.

The proprietors of the Westmount Grocery Co. commenced business with some misgivings. It was their first business venture, and naturally they wondered what the result would be. The store they rented was a large one, and the shelves were not groaning with goods. There was probably a little too much space, but an increasing business soon remedied that. They opened the store to the public on Wednesday, and on Saturday night all doubts were dispelled. The cash business for that day alone amounted to $125, and the other days showed results equally gratifying. If there was any room to spare on the shelves then, that condition was not long in passing. The business has grown to the capacity of the store in three years.

Quality and Courtesy.

Impressed with the ideas they had learned from those with whom they had been engaged, methods which they realized were essential to success, the two young men determined to carry them into their own business.

The first was quality of goods, and from that idea they have never swerved in the slightest. "The best" rather than "the cheapest" was the motto they felt would appeal to their future customers. The past three years have proved that their decision was a wise one.

Courtesy was another feature they decided not to overlook. They had been courteous as clerks, and it was natural that they should continue to be so. Moreover, the customers whom they used to serve so diligently, naturally heard about their beginning in business, and gave them a share of their patronage.

Business Came to Them.

Mr. Normandeau and Mr. Durocher had thought of little methods of getting trade, but they found that they did not need to pursue them. Business progressed favorably without any special efforts. When they opened their store they had no clerks, and their delivery system was composed of a horse and a second-hand buggy, with a boy driver. Now there are two extra clerks, a cashier, and two smart delivery wagons, and this the result of three years' work. They are both quite young men yet, and their example should be an encouragement to other young men who are following the daily routine of clerks.

NOT A JUNK SHOP.

Store Should Resemble Neither Second-Hand Shop Nor a Parlor.

A store should neither resemble a junk shop or a parlor. One is equally as bad as the other. There is an intermediate condition that merchants should strive to attain.

A store with goods nicely piled on the shelves and the counters nicely polished though bare of goods, and the centre space free from display cases or tables, may present a nice appearance, but it will not sell much goods. Then there is another extreme that is equally as bad. That is the store which presents a jumbled appearance with the counters completely covered with goods and the centre of the store crowded with tables, boxes and goods, so that customers can hardly find their way about. This is generally accompanied by a plentiful supply of dust; it is impossible to be otherwise, and the result is that customers are driven away.

The merchant should therefore try to arrange his store so that it will not present a crowded appearance nor allow by any chance sales to slip by. Most dealers are beginning to realize the great importance of proper display as a selling power. This does not mean the crowding of the store by trying to show everything at once, but rather more care taken in the arrangement and the frequent changing of the display.

These should not be placed so that customers are prevented thereby from moving freely about the store, nor should the counters be so covered that clerks are hindered in their work. Care should be taken in the selection of places for display as well as in their arrangements. Most stores have out of the way spots which make excellent places for the showing of goods and these should be used to the best advantage.

VALUE OF CHECKING.

Merchant Tells How Leaks Reduced His Profits.

"There are small leaks in many grocery stores that cut down the profits a great deal," said a local dealer the other day, "and the merchant will find it greatly to his benefit to be constantly on the outlook for these. While the larger ones attract attention and are immediately attended to, the smaller channels go on unchecked and form a real source of loss.

"A merchant will sometimes unknowingly allow even the larger ones to exist. I have a flour and feed department and found out recently that the profits were being reduced, on account of lack of system. Farmers would come in to the store and order a bag of flour or feed and say they would call around for it. They would drive up to the storehouse and get the flour and the clerk who gave it out, would depend on the person it was ordered from to charge it, while he would think that the other clerk had charged it.

"I found that in this way, a bag would occasionally be given out without charging. When I discovered this I put in force a checking system which made it impossible for this to occur."

Starch in England.

In 1564 starch was introduced into England by a Dutch woman, wife of a coachman in the service of the Queen.

Apple Shipments Less.

Only 240,740 barrels of apples were shipped from Halifax, N.S., during the past season, as compared with 694,257 the previous season.

Victoria Day Helps the Fruit Trade

Warmer Weather is Also Responsible for Improvement—Bananas and Lemons are Enjoying Good Trade — Lemons are Stronger—Pineapples are Easier—Strawberries Cheapen Slowly—Some Waste is Being Shown in Shipments—New Tomatoes are Getting Dearer Instead of Cheaper.

A good volume of trade has been experienced by fruit dealers at all centres this week. Victoria Day brought an increase in the demand at the beginning of the week, while the warmer weather is also accountable for the satisfactory amount of business being transacted. New vegetables are following in the footsteps of the fruit trade and the amount being sent out is quite large.

The crop of navel oranges in California is about cleaned up, but Canadian markets still have some supplies which are holding at firm prices for good quality stock. Mediterranean sweets are of good quality and some dealers are giving attention to them. The first of the California Valencias will not make their appearance until about the first week in June.

Larger supplies of strawberries and cheaper pineapples and rhubarb are affecting the orange trade to a certain extent. Shipments of pineapples will be larger for a week or so more and prices will likely be a little lower. Some waste is being shown in the strawberries arriving now on account of the long distance that they have to be transported, most of the present supplies being brought from Carolina.

Lemons and bananas are enjoying a good trade, the weather being favorable for their sale. Lemons are stronger again on account of heavy demand and conditions on the primary market. The visible supply of Sicily lemons according to information from one source is 116,500 boxes, against 202,200 boxes at the same time last year 210,700 boxes in 1909 and 282,600 boxes in 1908.

Vegetable prices fluctuate from day to day, being regulated by supply and demand. As supplies of different new vegetables increase, prices naturally tend to easiness.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—The past ten days have by the hot weather wave cut deeply into lemon stocks, and local dealers are already up to the $5 mark for choice goods. It is a question just what this market will do. Pineapples are slightly easier, but strawberries remain unchanged. There is a good demand for all fruits, bananas and grape fruit coming in for a good share.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The fruit business is reported satisfactory this week, Victoria Day having created some extra demand at the beginning of the week. Prices in general are quite firm. Navel oranges are steady at $3.75 to $4.00, while Mediterranean Sweets are quoted at $3.00 to $3.50. The Sweets arriving are of excellent quality. Pineapples are easier and are bringing $3 to $3.25. There are chances for some further slight reduction in prices. Tomatoes are in limited supply, and are bringing $5 per crate. Under heavier arrivals rhubarb is easier at 25 to 40 cents per dozen. Lemons are stronger again, with a brisk demand which makes it look like a higher market.

Vegetables.—Governed by supply and demand, vegetable prices are liable to change from day to day, but as is natural, prices are generally inclined to easiness. Wax beans, cucumbers, onions and new potatoes all exhibit an easier tendency this week. The sale of onions is not large, but general lines of new vegetables are doing fairly well. Carrots are one exception to the easiness, and some dealers are quoting Canadian carrots at a higher figure.

NEW BRUNSWICK AND FRUIT.

Former Trade Commissioner Speaks of Probable Industry.

St. John, N.B., May 25.—E. S. Kirkpatrick, former Canadian trade commissioner, at Havana, and now manager of the Canada West India Co., was in St. John this week and gave it as his opinion that a canning factory established here would be a profitable industry. For six months in the year, he said, the canneries could draw on the New Brunswick market, while for the other six months, they could look to Cuba.

He made the statement in view of the fact that New Brunswick farmers are going more extensively into fruit growing and also because it is possible to import tropical fruits at a very small cost. Pine apples, Mr. Kirkpatrick said, can be purchased in Cuba for a small sum, and can be brought to this port without duty, and he is convinced that the other countries in the tropics afford a valuable field for trade from Canada, and thinks that this would be a splendid way of opening it up.

Mr. Kirkpatrick said there was a probability of his company, whose objects are the promotion of larger markets through Canadian ports, opening offices both at St. John and Halifax.

The department of agriculture is planning to take charge of five illustration orchards this season in New Brunswick, and indications are that the second annual fruit show in St. John this year will be far better than that of last year.

GETTING RID OF RATS.

Sprinkle oil of peppermint generously to every hole and crack around the floors where rats are likely to frequent. It should be applied from garret to cellar. The odor of peppermint will be pretty strong at first, but it possesses the advantage of not being entirely offensive and is certainly the lesser evil of the two.

Mustard scattered in the same way has been found unusually good to rid the house of mice, roaches and other "vermin."

Fresh Fish Receipts are More Liberal

Supplies of Fresh Varieties are Heavier — Responsible for Lower Prices on Some Lines—Pickerel are Again in Season—Lobster Season Extended—New Brunswick Reports Good Herring Season—Quality Not as Good as in Past Years — Newfoundland Seal Fisheries.

Prices are generally a little easier this week, and as the season advances the market should show slight reductions. The demand is reported good and the trade on the whole is satisfactory. The supplies of fresh fish are increasing and jobbers are giving a fast service in order to deliver the fish in as fresh a state as possible. Smoked haddies are also in demand. There is still some frozen fish carried in the cold storage concerns.

Nova Scotia reports fresh fish more plentiful, and of good quality. The government has extended the lobster season on the west coast of Nova Scotia for two weeks.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—More liberal supplies have been responsible for lower prices for some lines of fresh fish. Dressed haddock, British Columbia Salmon lake trout, haddock, dressed perch and dressed bullheads are all lower this week. The supplies of Gaspe salmon are heavier and a slightly lower quotation is offered. Brook trout are coming in more freely. It is in excellent condition and the price is probably as low as it will be this season. Pickerel are again in season and fresh supplies are coming forward liberally. B. C. salmon is also being received in fairly liberal quantities.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—It is said among the fish dealers in St. John that the herring catch this season has been exceptionally good, although the quality of the fish is said to be not as good as in past years. The fishermen of Grand Manan, Charlotte County, who have stations at Baie Verte and Port Elgin are reported as having their smoke-houses full of herring.

Being between the first and second runs, this has been an off week for gaspereaux. Prices have kept a strong average, because of a great demand for bait. Fresh fish still retain their position on the market, but all grades of dried fish have declined in value.

Fresh shad made their first appearance on the local market this week, as well as salmon in fair quantities considering the earliness of the season. Shad sold from 35 to 60 cents each, while salmon brought from 35 to 40 cents per pound.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Trade in fish is not overly brisk, but continues fairly steady, with fresh fish most prominent. The other lines, however, are receiving some attention. No particular change has taken place in prices on the local market, but some lines under increased supplies are inclined to casiness.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, N.S.—Receipts of fresh fish here this week were quite heavy, and all the dealers have good stocks on hand. Lobsters are in better supply locally, and there has been some improvement in the size. The price, however, holds firm. Fresh herring are reported in abundance at the Magdalen Islands, and several vessels are now there loading cargoes. Salmon are more plentiful, but few are offered here, as better prices can be obtained in Boston and New York.

The quality of the fresh fish now coming on the market is better than for some time. The fish are larger and fatter, and are considered excellent stock. There are no signs of mackerel on the coast yet. All salt fish prices are firm, and the general demand is good. Yarmouth this week shipped 104 casks of codfish to Trinidad, and 300 cases of canned lobsters to Germany.

The lobster fishery on the Cape Breton coast is reported good. Most of the lobsters taken on this coast are canned and the factories are now running on full time. The announcement was made this week that the government had extended the lobster fishing season for two weeks on the west coast of Nova Scotia. Dealers report a good demand for all kinds of smoked fish.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, N.F.—Three hundred and five thousand seals, valued at $493,000, were secured by the eighteen vessels of the Newfoundland sealing fleet during the season just closed. Last year the fleet reported a catch of 330,000, with a value of $612,000. This falling off is accounted for in a measure by the loss of the steamer Harlaw, which was crushed in the ice off St. Paul's Island not long after the opening of the season. Unusual ice conditions also tended to reduce the catch. For a time it was feared that the season would have to be delayed because of the ice. The fishermen were finally able to get away on time, leaving port March 13, but were seriously hampered in their work for the first fortnight by the ice.

HANDLE GOOD BROOMS.

Broom Manufacturer Says Quality of Brooms is Improving.

"The quality of brooms being used is gradually improving," said a broom manufacturer recently. "And," he added, "out of orders amounting to 3,800 dozen, 90 per cent. was for the better grades."

This has been brought about by the high prices which were in effect last year. Those brooms which were sold at a low price were necessarily of poor quality and customers were not at all satisfied with them in many cases. They began accordingly to buy the better quality, and now with brooms down about 25 per cent. from last year's prices, they still continue to purchase the better kind.

This improvement in quality is a good thing for both the dealer and the customer. When a dealer sells a cheap broom, he generally gets only a small profit while the customer does not get satisfaction. The handling of the better grade in brooms as in many other articles which a grocer carries, is a benefit to all concerned.

Handling the Woman with Small Purse

Why Montreal Dealer Believes That Cash is Best Policy to Follow in Certain Cases—Dangerous to Venture Beyond Certain Limit—Believes Credit is only a Habit—Able to Buy on Better Basis.

Different problems are presented to different grocers.

The customers of one member of the trade who is located in a wealthy residential district often consider that certain privileges are due them for some reason or other and the grocer caters to this as much as possible.

Another grocer is in a community where the customers are more representative and still another is doing business with a laboring class entirely.

The methods employed by one grocer would probably not be applicable by another. For instance, the customers with an unlimited purse is a good subject for advanced salesmanship. They are accustomed to dainties and luxuries and are always looking for something new. But, the grocer in the less pretentious district generally remembers that the average weekly envelope, part of the contents of which must pass through his hands, is none too bulky and he realizes that this family and that, can afford a certain amount each week for groceries and beyond the accustomed limit it is rather dangerous to venture.

Experience of Montrealer.

The experience of J. A. Phaneuf, a Montreal grocer, with three stores to his credit, is interesting. His interest in the grocery business has extended through the past twelve years.

He is an advocate of the cash system especially in a quarter where the people are of the laboring class. This is not because he mistrusts the man who toils for daily sustenance but because the customer of limited means should strive to remain free from debt of any kind.

Credit a Habit.

Mr. Phaneuf considers the credit system a habit. If some one in poor circumstances asked him for charity in the form of groceries he would doubtless respond to their appeal, but when a customer has money and requires goods, he fails to understand why she should not pay for it when she receives it. That is the general case as he regards it, and in applying it to his customers he endeavors to prove to them why the cash idea is dollars to their own advantage.

Saves Five Per Cent.

When he opened his third store he learned that the former proprietors had given it a rather bad reputation. There has been failures, it had remained unoccupied and credit was freely given. One of the first enquiries he received was from one of these former customers. She asked him for credit. Mr. Phaneuf explained his position thus: "Madam, I have found that this system is to your advantage. Following it, I can give you prices that will save you five per cent. on your month's purchases. A bank does not offer you terms as favorable as that."

He pointed out to that customer as he did to others who were at all interested just how he was enabled to offer special advantages by the system he had adopted.

Outstanding Debts.

Mr. Phaneuf stated that one of the reasons why he adopted a cash system

They Won't Buy Too Much.

in his business was that he observed that many failures seemed to be attributable to "outstanding debts." A proper policy of collections would no doubt have averted many of these, but Mr. Phaneuf was not favorably disposed to the idea especially with people whose weekly allowance was quite limited.

"If you do five or six hundred dollars a week in your business," he said, "do you not feel more secure when you know that all your money is in?

No Worry at All.

"There is no worry as to whether you are going to lose any of it, no bills to send out at the end of the month and no squabbles over purchases made week previous and which may be questioned when the time for settlement arrives. You are able to buy on a better basis and if you so desire you offer this advantage to the customer together with the gain you make by eliminating the cost of looking after the accounts, collecting them and those which you may never collect.

"Every grocer does advertising of some kind, and I look upon this as an advertising method which will attract the customer who finds it necessary to make use of little savings.

Issues Circulars.

"I have been issuing circulars offering special prices. None of those are below cost and on the most of them there is a profit which included with the ordinary sales makes the total appreciable. As I said before, these specials may be included under the expense heading of advertising, if necessary, but they need not be a loss.

"When a customer pays cash there is not the tendency to buy things which were not needed and while the total sales may thus be reduced, the grocer is not running the danger of an account that may not be met on pay day. A limited purse from week to week permits just so much and but little more, and if an account is overrun one week there will likely be a curtailment on the customer's part during the following week to make up the balance.

Should Not Discriminate.

"A grocer doing a cash business should not discriminate, allowing some credit because their financial standing may be a little stronger. The others are bound to discover this favoritism sooner or later and their resentment will likely show itself in the cutting off of their trade. My own landlord, a few Saturdays ago sent in a nice order over the phone. It was sent out C.O.D., but the delivery man was told at the house "I don't happen to have the cash just now, but I will drop in on Monday." This customer was told that the rule of paying on receipt of goods applied to everybody and my landlord on investigation found that change could be made and the delivery was satisfactory to all parties.

"This idea of 'I'll pay next week' is nothing more than a habit which, perhaps, may work out satisfactorily enough in most cases, but I think that business would be on a much sounder basis if the cash principle were more general. At any rate, I believe it has many advantages with the class of trade I have referred to, but the people have become accustomed to it and will continue to expect it, except, of course, when they choose to visit the large departmental stores whose example seems to be worth emulating."

Tell customers that raisins may be seeded easier if covered with boiling water and allowed to stand about ten minutes.

Delivery Important in Holding Trade

Man Who Does a Thriving Business is Man Who Gives The Best Service in All Branches—Story of a Man Who Made Deliveries Only Every Other Day—Customers Did Not Fall in Line—Courtesy.

Two merchants are situated side by side with both having about equal chances. Both men can buy the same goods and both sell at about the same price. These things being equal, what is to determine which grocer shall do the largest amount of business? We have seen two grocers so situated, but find that one man is doing a thriving trade while the other has a hard time to pay expenses. The solution given by those who have looked into the matter, is that the grocer with the most business was the man who gave the best service to his customers.

Service is the magnet which draws trade in business to-day. Other things being equal, you will find that the people will deal at the store with the best service. Therefore you should have a delivery service as perfect as possible in order to get the best results.

Every Other Day.

A story comes from an Ontario town where a merchant thought that customers were expecting too much by wanting parcels delivered at all hours and every day. So he decided that delivering every other day should be sufficient, and besides he thought that it would mean a saving. But he soon found that customers did not fall in line with his new idea and that many of his best customers were gradually dropping off, and he was forced to give up the plan. A new family moved into the town just about the time that this merchant started his every-other-day delivery. Living close to his store, the housewife decided she would deal there. She went in on a Monday morning and ordered a supply of groceries. Having waited all day and no groceries appearing, she went to the store to inquire as to the reason, and the grocer bluntly informed her that they did not deliver on Monday. Just at dinner time the next day her groceries arrived, and she had by that time decided she would rather walk a couple of blocks farther and deal at a store where they delivered goods sooner. Even if a grocer has a similar rule in regard to delivery, it would be well to break it in a case like this.

Shed for Farmers.

Besides good delivery, there are many other services which the grocer may render, which customers appreciate very much. A merchant in a farming community built a shed near his store, so that the farmers might have a place to put their horses when they came to town. This same merchant often lends his horse and rig to customers, if they should wish to bring a trunk to or from the station or for some similar errand. He often has his delivery man assist customers in odd jobs and has been known himself to spend a half-day in assisting a customer to move.

There is a grocer in a small town who recently gained a customer just by his kindliness in offering to send some parcels to her home. She had just purchased some groceries at her regular buying place, but they had not offered to send the parcels up for her, so she started to carry them home, although it was quite a heavy load. Dropping into this other merchant's store to make a small purchase, he at once offered to send all the parcels up for her. She appreciated this kindliness on his part, and has since become one of his best customers.

A grocer's business is to a large extent dependable on the quality of service he gives his customers.

Should Have Information all Prepared

Knowledge in Advance, Absolutely Necessary to Good Salesman—Ability to Return a Quick Answer Not Sufficient — A Transaction in Tomato Catsup, and Another — The Reason Why—Some Suggestions for Selling Brooms.

Knowledge of goods prepared in advance is the kind of thing that counts in salesmanship. This information does not consist of an answer or argument brought out on the spur of the moment and which carries no force, but of information about the goods which is correct and which is sufficiently strong to clinch an argument. Of course, ability to give an answer to a customer on the spur of the moment is something to be commended but where possible the arguments should be settled in your mind beforehand.

When any new goods arrive, learn all you can about them, their value and their use. If you get in an article that dearer than a similar line sold by another dealer look into the reason. Find this out beforehand so that when a customer asks you why yours is dearer you will be able to explain the reason satisfactorily.

Selling Catsup.

The other day in a grocery store, a lady asked for catsup. The clerk presented a bottle with the information that it was worth 15 cents.

Of course the customer came back with the argument: "Why I can buy the same sized bottle at Jones' for 10 cents."

The clerk knew that his firm was not getting a larger profit than any one else for their goods and that there must be a reason for the difference in price. "This must be a better catsup," he said.

This was but a flimsy argument, like that a merchant would give if he were really asking 5 cents too much, and it was not at all convincing.

Pointed Out Difference.

Another somewhat similar sale was witnessed in another store. This time the bottle of catsup presented was priced at 25 cents and the customer said she could buy the same sized bottle for 20 cents at another store. Of course this clerk, like the other, knew there must be a difference but he did more than say: "It must be better," he pointed out wherein it was worth more.

"Yes," he said, "you can buy catsup for 20 cents, but it is watery, being made from the pulp of the tomato, and it lacks flavor. Now, see how thick this 25 cent article is," and he tipped it sideways showing its thickness. "Only the best solid ripe tomatoes and best spices are used in making this and in it you get the true tomato flavor."

Talking Brooms.

Then, we have the clerk who will present a broom and when asked the reason why it is dearer than another he will generally say: "I guess it must be heavier than the other." This is no argument at all, because a large number of housewives prefer the lighter broom.

But the real salesman will have the true reason just why that broom costs more than another.

"First you will notice madam that the corn in this broom is much finer than the other. It is all straight corn, is not knotty or bunchy. It will therefore last longer. The handle is smoother and is made of lighter wood but contains all the strength of the heavier. That is something that you will appreciate."

Have Argument Back.

This or perhaps less than this will convince a customer that it is worth more but always have an argument back in case it does not: "You will notice that this broom is a five string and holds the corn in position better than the other which is only four string."

Such ability to give convincing arguments in favor of the goods is something that the clerk who aims at true salesmanship should study, as it will undoubtedly be to his advantage to do so.

Frost Affects the California Dried Fruit Crop

READERS of The Canadian Grocer interested in dried fruits are looking toward the new crops in the hope of finding a solution to the present condition of the market. Generally speaking stocks are extremely light and it now appears that in no case will there be a heavy carry over. In fact the question before the trade is whether both ends will meet. Wholesalers state that their holdings are becoming more and more limited and in some instances their stocks have been exhausted.

Prices as a result have been advanced, some of them being double the figures that represented them this time last year. It is, therefore, necessary that crops be heavy this season if there is to be a resumption of normal quotations. Evaporated apples, apricots and peaches, prunes, raisins and currants, too, are all reduced in supply. Some of them may be considered off the market.

In addition to straightened stocks the new crop are according to reports being ushered in under unfavorable weather conditions. Prices have been too high to suit many of the trade who fear the permanent loss of customers when once they are turned away as consumers. While it is yet early to consider the question, still there are reasons for viewing the present situation with a certain amount of disquietude.

According to reports recent frosts have wrought havoc with some of the young fruit. Edward Denning, a Montreal representative of Kearley & Tonge, Limited, returned recently from a trip through California where he passed through the famed fruit lands and was enabled to estimate the condition of the crops.

Apricots a Disappointment.

"The frost has certainly damaged the apricot crop and it is believed that the yield will be no more than half a crop," he said. "When the trees were in blossom they gave promise of a splendid crop but it was when the new fruit was young and small that the severe frost was felt. The fruit had not become sufficiently firm to withstand this attack and from the examination that has been made of the trees, no more than half a crop will be received."

Prunes Affected.

"The cold weather has also affected prunes quite considerably. It was not easy to determine just what damage had been done but it is appreciable. Peaches and pears seem to have escaped with but slight touches."

As a result of this condition packers refuse to put a price on apricots. High bids have been received from different countries, Germany being one of them, but so far there has been no response from the west. Practically the same is true of prunes and the position at present is very strong. Mr. Denning felt that from the present outlook a fairly large crop of raisins would be received. The almond crop should also be satisfactory. The citrus crop is large.

In regard to prunes, Mr. Denning stated that much depends upon the French prune crop. If it is heavy, naturally it would be expected to have a weakening effect on the general prune market. The demand for prunes has increased in the United States, in Germany and England and if prices are to be at all reasonable the world's crop must be well up to the average. It is this uncertainty that is attracting special attention just now.

The Grocer's Encyclopedia—the Spices

Something About the Vegetable Condiments That are Employed in Seasoning of Foods—Their Digestive Attributes—Dried Pepper—An Unripe Fruit of Climbing Shrub—Cloves the Unopened Flower Buds of Evergreen Tree—The Others.

The word "spices" is used as a general term, embracing a number of vegetable condiments, both ground and whole, employed in the seasoning and flavoring of food.

In addition to improving the flavor, in a large number of cases they act as digestives, since in coming into contact with the membranes of the digestive tract they cause an increased secretion of the digestive fluids. Spices have been used in all ages and in nearly all parts of the world. They are chiefly the products of hot climates. To describe some of them:

Fruit of Climbing Shrub.

Black pepper consists of the dried unripe fruit of a perennial climbing shrub, native in the forests of southern India, and largely cultivated in Java, Sumatra, Borneo, the Philippines, and also in the West Indies, a large proportion coming from the Malabar coast in India. In two or three years pepper cuttings bear spikes of red berries. These are gathered before they are ripe, spread on drying boards, where they become black and shrivelled, the way they are marketed. White pepper has exactly the same origin as black pepper, but the berries are allowed to become nearly ripe. They are then soaked in water, and the outer skin of the fruits removed by rubbing in the hands.

Buds of Evergreen Tree.

Cloves are the unopened flower buds of an evergreen tree reaching a height of 20 feet or more. Supplies are received chiefly from Zanzibar and Pemba, where the trees flourish, and also from Penang and Amboyna. The clove tree raised from seed begins to bear from the fifth to the seventh year. The picking of the young, unopened flower buds commences in August and continues until November, each tree being picked, on an average, three times a season. The cloves are spread in the sun to dry, the curing occupying about a week. Cloves owe their valuable properties to the presence of a considerable quantity of the volatile oil, oil of cloves.

Dried Kernels of Seeds.

Nutmegs and mace consist of the dried kernels of the seeds of a tree about 25 feet high, resembling somewhat the orange tree. The round or oval fruits, which closely resemble a small peach in size and shape, are at first green, but turn yellow when ripe. The thick fleshy outer covering becomes dry, and separates into two valves from the apex, exposing the scarlet mace, a membrane covering a thin brown skin, which encloses the true kernel or nutmeg.

Ginger is prepared from the dried roots of a plant of somewhat reedlike habits, found wild in Asia and now cultivated in South America, the West Indies, West Africa and the warmer parts of Queensland. Dried ginger is of two kinds, peeled and unpeeled, the latter being merely the cleaned roots dried in the sun. In the preparation of the peeled variety, the cleaned roots are thrown into water and then peeled with a narrow-bladed knife, care being taken to remove only the thinest possible layer, since the essential oil and resin is just beneath the skin. When dried, it is then ready for export. Preserved ginger is made by placing the roots in earthenware vessels and a strong boiling solution of sugar poured over them. The syrup is drained off after 24 hours and the process repeated for two days.

An American Product.

Allspice consists of the dried unripe fruits of a tree grown in the West Indies, Mexico and South America, while Jamaica supplies a large quantity. The spice consists of a small, spherical, wrinkled fruit and possesses a fragrant odor, and the name allspice is derived from the fact that the odor is regarded as resembling that of cinnamon, cloves and nutmegs combined.

Cinnamon is the bark of young shoots of a small evergreen tree, native of Ceylon, and which has been introduced into Java, Cape Verde Islands, Brazil, the West Indies and Uganda. Left to itself, it would be a small tree, but it is kept pruned in order to induce the formation of long willowy shoots, from which the bark may be obtained. The fragrance is due to the cinnamon oil in the bark.

Selling Rhubarb.

The merchant is inclined to give little attention to the rhubarb trade. That might be all right other years, but in this when both canned and dried fruits are so high in price it should not be so. It is a palatable food, serving the housewife both for pie and sauce and can for some time on, be made a profitable side-line.

Kept a Copy of His Trade Paper Before Him for 14 Years

One of The Canadian Grocer's readers in Prescott, Ont., paid a splendid tribute last week to The Canadian Grocer.

He showed our representative a copy of this paper dated April 23, 1897 which he had kept on his counter continually for the 14 years.

It contained exclusive information he has had occasion to refer to many times since.

"Crown Brand" CORN SYRUP

made an extensive increase last year. This increase was due to three causes:

FIRST, Extensive advertising the bill-boards from coast to coast are telling the people about "Crown Brand."

SECOND, the quality of "Crown Brand"—the user who once tries it comes back for more.

THIRD, (and by no means least important) the grocer's margin of profit in "Crown Brand" is all it should be.

Your individual sales should have been more. Were they? Let people know you're selling "Crown Brand" Corn Syrup; GET YOUR SHARE.

It Pleases Your Trade

When you please your trade you are building success, commercially. The easiest way is to let your customers know just what they pay for goods, what they owe after each purchase and to have your accounts in such shape that you can, without making another figure, tell them the total of their indebtedness.

With The McCaskey Gravity Account Register System every account is posted and totaled with each purchase and each customer has the same record of the account as the merchant and in the same handwriting. Giving the customer a statement in full with each purchase inspires him with confidence in his dealer. He wants to trade where he knows how his account stands at all times, where his account is ready for settlement at the same figures he has whenever he is ready to settle.

Only One Writing The McCASKEY SYSTEM First and Still the Best

Is in use in 70,000 retail stores in the United States Seventy thousand merchants find that The McCaskey System cuts out useless bookkeeping (posting and copying from one book to another), prevents errors in keeping accounts, prevents loss of customers through disputes over accounts, prevents forgetting to charge, acts as an automatic collector, as an automatic credit limit and puts them in position to prove their loss in case of fire.

Do you want to know who in your locality is using The McCaskey System? We have thousands of testimonials, some from merchants you know in your state, county or town.

A postal card or a letter will bring you information without obligation on your part to purchase.

Better write to-day, or tear out this advertisement, sign your name and address. We'll know what you want.

Simple, But Oh, How It Sold Dates!

Here's a simple little thing one grocer did that brought him three days of splendid date sales.

He cut our advertisement of DROMEDARY DATES from a monthly magazine—we advertise in nearly all the good ones—and pasted it on the front of his window. Over it was a brush sign, "We Sell These," and in the window a display of the cartons with one open. He says he never sold so many dates in his life.

DROMEDARY DATES are sure to sell if people see them, because they are the finest selected fruit, wrapped carefully in oiled paper and packed in cartons. They're clean, fresh, and indefinitely moist. All jobbers.

We also pack ROYAL EXCELSIOR and ANCHOR brand package dates.

New PEAS (with MINT) in Cooking Nets (Farrow's Patent)

You may have new peas now, or at any time of the year, if you buy Farrow's "Patent Net" Peas and cook them as directed.

FARROW'S 'Patent Net' PEAS

are the finest early green peas, gathered at the beginning of the season when peas are sweetest, most tender and delicious. Our process preserves ALL their natural flavour. When cooked they are so delicious and tender that you cannot detect them from fresh garden peas. They are very easily cooked and remarkably cheap—a 10 cent Net provides liberal portions for 8 people. Farrow's "Patent Net" Peas are English grown, absolutely pure, free from all preservatives and colouring matter.

The grandest 10 cent line the Old Country has ever sent us.

Be Careful How You Buy Your Refrigerator

Don't get an "Ice Box."

The damp, musty, stagnant air "Ice Box" is a breeding place for germs and disease, and the average refrigerator is merely an elaborate Ice Box.

Proper ventilation and perfect circulation of cold, dry air is only properly obtained in the "Eureka" Refrigerator, which has an exclusive and patented system of air circulation, and this guarantees an absolutely dry refrigerator.

We have been twenty-five years exclusively manufacturing refrigerators, and our present models have all our knowledge and experience worked into them.

In the matter of sanitation in materials used, in design and finish, in price, there is no refrigerator on the market can compare with the "EUREKA."

REAL TRUE CREAM AT LAST

Mr. A. McGill, the Chief Analyst to the Inland Revenue Department of Canada, wrote in Bulletin 144, as far back as under date 3rd June, 1908:—"The word 'CREAM' is largely used to designate condensed milk. This is incorrect and SHOULE BE MADE ILLEGAL As a matter of fact, these so-called 'creams' are not any richer in milk fat than sugared condensed milks, and many of them are distinctly poorer. Among the samples examined ONLY ONE (No. 25628 which contains 25.20 per cent. of fat) IS ENTITLED TO BE CALLED CREAM."

This one sample was prepared by FUSSELL & CO., Ltd., LONDON AND NORWAY.

FUSSELL'S GOLDEN BUTTERFLY BRAND CREAM

The Tourist Creating New Middleman

Interesting Sketch of the Manner in Which One Big House Made Good the Damage Done Its Trade by Customers Leaving in Summer—The Value Placed on Service—Reaching Out for the Business of Five Years Hence—How Country Resort Dealer is Supposed to be Killing the Goose of Golden Egg.

"Way down in the smoke-cussed, heat-oppressed cities in the United States, where men give themselves over wholly for fifty weeks in the year to the struggle for the elusive dollar, tens of thousands of men and women and children already are contemplating longingly their brief two-week holiday.

Far up in the hilly recesses of the many summer resorts of Canada, where pine-laden breezes refresh the jaded workers, and rivers rushing steel-blue over rocky beds to lose themselves in gurgling protest in the placid depths below, bring peace to overworked brains, or where the pure wind-swept mountain spaces hold out, alluringly, their wonderful prospects, dealers are anticipating this rush, and already are rubbing their hands briskly together while dreaming over the many dollars they may draw from the reluctant pockets of these, our visitors.

The New Middleman.

Between these two, tourist and the retailer of the resorts, there stands a third. This one is the big city dealer. He is expectant of the rush also, for he relies upon it to make up for him in sales the loss of the trade of all the big customers who have fled the city for other lands, precisely as the tourist from the neighboring Republic have fled. The big city retailer depends upon this summer traffic to preserve the balance of business. The transient trade has become necessary to him, and accordingly he has turned his whole organization to the work. More than the patronage of one season is looked for, for this big dealer looks out with the eye of faith upon a greater and a grander army of folks in five years time. For the thousands who drift in by twos and threes, and for those who come in groups club-like, with all their camp trappings with them, his selling forces are ever ready to command. Like a giant spider he holds his place of vantage throwing out the meshes of his great web by advertising in all the principal cities from which these customers come. Money is spent ungrudgingly and service is given gratis to all who require it, even though the monetary returns are but small.

Trade Increasing.

Steadily and surely his policy is bearing fruit. Each year sees more and and more of this trade coming to him at least in the first instance. It is his hope that the coming years will multiply this trade many times over. He does not know this will be the result; he only believes it will. But the organization goes on eternally. Strangely enough, he does not reach out for the business originating in his own city. That is not big enough to attract him. His sole object is to be the middleman standing between the tourist in his native city and the retail dealer in food stuffs in the resorts they go to. His organization makes this possible. Thousands upon thousands in money are spent; many stenographers are kept busy with correspondence, and many clever retail managers are forever working out details for the bettering of the trade. The trouble and expense appears to be justifiable for the traffic is big. Service is the keynote of the whole, and strict integrity as to prices is the second doctrine. The rules are those of the Medes and Persians which must not be altered. The business is wanted on good terms or not wanted at all.

Some Michie History.

Not all of the retail grocers in Canada could handle this trade, for but few could spend, without direct prospect of return, the necessary money, nor could they provide the equally essential selling organization. But there is a lesson it it all for the resort dealer to ponder over. The conditions that go to make it possible and profitable should be matters of thought for him. He may so be able to act as to enlarge his own returns and make surer the business he is so dependent upon during the fleeting summer months. In the account given below of the manner in which the old-established Michie firm in Toronto has developed this traffic until it has made of the dull summer-time probably the most profitable season of the year there may be points for him to consider.

"I can remember well the time when you could shoot a cannon down the centre of this store during the summer months without running the danger of hitting a customer," said C. E. Stone, the secretary, in discussing the matter with The Grocer. "The great majority of our patrons being wealthy or well-to-do, always left the city for other climates as soon as the weather became really warm. Accordingly we had to reach out for other trade to fill the breach, and it was the tourist business that was hit upon. We have been working upon that problem for a quarter of a century and it has grown to such proportions that often we have been compelled to keep a staff of men working late, sometimes even all night, to fill the orders. We cover a wide field, but it has been our custom always to never invade a territory already well served, or to send goods to points so distant that the expense of shipping becomes a serious factor. We take the position that other and nearer houses can supply them just as well as we can. We do not want that business.

The Place of Service.

The one great factor that has stood out clearly in all this business-building is SERVICE. It has been the keynote of the whole. Of course we had to have the goods, but it was the giving of these goods in just the way we knew they were wanted, at just the time they were needed, and in just the condition we knew was necessary, that was the great essential. We relied upon that to bring in repeat orders and we also depended on favorable report for the getting of other business we had not been able to reach. Personal advertising is a very good thing. But the whole proposition, in brief, is service.

"Another factor that is important, is integrity in prices. We have received letters from folks down in the United States complaining of the prices on the list they had received from us. They could not understand the difference, they wrote. We have always replied that the prices they would pay for the goods were precisely the same as those paid for the same stock by our Toronto customers. They were the prices upon which we wanted their trade. If we could not get those prices, their business we would not touch. Generally speaking we would get the business.

Mistake of Resort Dealer.

"Now I think that it is along this line that the retailer at the resort makes his mistake. As far as he is concerned it is a pity, but it is well for us because it is steadily sending business to us we might not otherwise secure. For instance, to be quite plain, the dealer in his store at the camp is always looking far the ultimate dollar. He always endeavors to see through into the pockets of his transient customers and to gauge the money there. Broadly speaking he always tries to have all that money in his till before the tourist leaves town. He does not look beyond the mere present. He cannot see that customer returning to the camp the next summer with probably one or two or three, or twenty more upon whose minds he may exert an influence affecting his trade. He will persist in charging and charging until the last cent has been turned over to him. Then he is satisfied. But what of the customer? He comes away with the uncomfortable feeling that he has been fleeced. Not if he can help it will he go back to that camp dealer for his goods next year. Instead he writes to some reputable city house where he can feel sure of both goods and prices, and the little retailer has killed another "goose of the golden egg." Such complaints as these come to us frequently, so that the tendency I speak of must be rather wide-spread.

"Not that all so-called country dealers are such; I don't mean to even imply that. It is surprising the volume of business handled by these men in some of the small resorts. I am speaking of a particular class of dealers whose whole ambition seems to be to get the ultimate dollar for the year whether the customer is to feel aggrieved or not. He cannot see and work for the future, and so does not appreciate the satisfied steady buyer of five years hence. Consequently more and more of these men come to us for their goods each year. Frankly we are looking out for the trade of five years hence, and for that of ten years hence, if it comes to that. The organization is eternal.

City Trade Not Wanted.

"The business that originates in Toronto does not attract us. We dress our window that all may come and see, and we ungrudgingly hand out information as to goods, needs, etc., but we find that in most cases the city folk have the orders filled at the store where they are accustomed to deal. So we do not count at all upon the business of the tourists of Toronto. They get the information they seek because it has always been our policy to be lavish of information whether the business came as a consequence or not. That is another of the essentials of this particular traffic. One must be ready to give ungrudgingly of information. Many times have we given away ten dollars' worth of service without getting a dollar in order in return, but it is all in the day's work.

"So the whole may be summed up in the following system. We advertise in all the cities whence the traffic comes. We hold strictly to prices such as are paid by our regular customers. We give the best possible service that can be given, and we simply wait, counting upon satisfied customers telling others who are dissatisfied and relying upon the wonderful power of personal advertising."

Hints for Securing the Campers' Trade

Methods That Have Been Followed With Good Advantage in One Resort Locality—The Advertisement in the Hotel — The Circular Informing City People of Stocks—A Campers' Window.

In a short time now the restless inhabitants of the big cities will be turning their attention to the selection of some place to spend their brief summer vacation, and it would probably prove to be a good piece of business for the dealers in the towns and resorts so fortunate as to attract these transients, to provide beforehand stocks that would serve to draw their trade.

These people that are able to abandon their busy life for even so brief a space of time as a fortnight, are also able to afford good things to eat, and although individually their business would not amount to much, taken collectively, it is worth considering. A camp will use a quantity of expensive canned goods in its brief existence, for it is on canned goods, meats, soups, vegetables, milk, that the camper depends. There will also be vegetables and fruits, but the former is the chief source of supply.

Different dealers in different localities would have different methods of reaching this trade. Some go to it, others make it visit the store, while still others depend upon luck to swing the business their direction.

One Dealer's Methods.

A merchant in a country town, the centre of a number of summer resorts, tells of the methods he employs to secure the camping trade. "The people from our own town who go camping are easily reached through our ordinary advertising channels," he said, "but the outsider presents a more difficult problem. In the larger town he could be reached through the daily newspaper, but we have only a weekly in our town, and it can be made of little use in this respect.

"One method which we use is the placing of framed advertisements in the hotels of the town where the campers visit before leaving for the lakes.

"Another help was to place an advertisement of our store on the back of the liveryman's card. This advertisement gave directions where our store was located, and stated that we gave special attention to campers' supplies. A note on the bottom testified to our willingness to give campers any information they wished regarding the neighboring summer resorts. When the camper stepped off the train, he was approached by the liveryman, who handed him a card, and if he required supplies, seeing our advertisement on the back, he would in most cases come to our store."

"All such things as looking after their livery rigs for them, suggesting goods which they might require, looking after their supplies so that they had no bother once they gave us their order, and many other little services, are things that are appreciated by campers, who are out for a holiday, and wish to have the least trouble possible."

Another dealer in a summer resort town secures each year all the names and addresses possible of the campers who are at all likely to come back the following season. Early in spring he gets out a circular pointing out the folly of bringing goods from the city, when he can give them just as good at equal prices, and with less bother. These circulars are mailed in the spring to all the addresses on the list. This same dealer makes deliveries of goods to each of the three summer resorts in the vicinity once a week. He says he receives orders enough each week to make it pay him.

A Typical Window.

The window given herewith is one that should be productive of results, being calculated to stimulate the passerby to camp life, and to attract the notice of those who have already made up their minds to go. The arrangement is simple, and can be put up with little time or trouble. The tent, and log of wood, and fishing pole, and fire-pot, are all too familiar for mentioning. The background is a painted screen, and one could no doubt be secured for a small rental at the local photographer's. The floor of the window might be dressed to resemble sod. The piling of the cans explains itself. This could be varied to suit the needs of individual dealers. In some places, the sod or the background would not be needed; in some other places a simple screen would do. There should be some grouping of it, however, available and serviceable to many dealers.

Another Example to Show That the Sanest Way to Estimate is From the Selling End—The Building of Pyramids—Tricks Learned by the Ancients and Lost by Their Children — The Moral.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Mr. Jamieson mentions engineering in connection with the building of the pyramids.

I like best to talk about things with which I am familiar, and I do not know much about engineering, so what I say must be taken for what it is probably worth. I believe, however, that we are not in position to say whether our present appliances equal those used on the pyramids, because the idea has been mislaid during the intervening centuries.

Recording Ideas.

Whatever we have accomplished since civilization got its second wind is on record, and we are thus far ahead of the earlier builders, since whatever we are now doing is there for the future to see. Whenever we get around to feel the need of more pyramids, I imagine we shall be able to build them; and we shall probably do it more cheaply and rapidly than did old Cheops.
